Destitute Storm Illinois Capitol Demanding Aid

State House Is Guarded by Heavy Detail of Police.

19 Are Arrested In Chicago Crisis

Final Battle Due Today in Legislature on Relief Funds.

By the Associated Press.

Springfield, Ill., May 7.—Demonstrators marched on the State Capitol today and 19 persons were seized in Chicago as the unemployed moved a step nearer the hunger line because of the Illinois relief crisis.

Late today, however, the House approved several technical amendments to the 3 per cent sales tax bill designed to furnish $3,000,000 for relief and to guarantee Federal grants. The bill then was placed on third reading, ready for a battle over final passage tomorrow.

Five hundred demonstrators waved banners, chanted slogans and marched about the capitol building demanding that relief stations be reopened immediately. They promised a State-wide march on Springfield before the end of the week if the relief problem were not settled.

19 Arrested.

In Chicago several scattered demonstrations were held and hand bills passed out. Chief among the 19 detained, most on disorderly conduct charges, were Karl Lockner, Communist leader, and Meyer Levin, writer. Levin's wife, also detained, said her husband attended the demonstration only to collect material for his work.

At Danville, 500 relief recipients at a mass meeting voted no violence while the Legislature considers the tax bill.

The Springfield marchers milled about the statue of Abraham Lincoln on the Statehouse grounds, listening to the harangues of their orators, while a delegation of five carried their complaints to Gov. Henry Horner.

Eight extra highway patrolmen were posted at the Statehouse to protect property and a force of city policemen turned out to maintain order as difficulties incident to the collapse of the relief organization reached a new peak.

Doors to the House galleries were closed upon a capacity audience as the representa'ives prepared to take up bills to raise the State's share of the relief burden.

Passage Vital to Relief.

Their adoption was regarded as the only solution of the grave problem after Harry Hopkins, FERA administrator, flatly informed the Illinois congressional delegation at Washington that no Government funds would be granted until the State provided its contribution.

The parade of 500 men and women members of the Illinois Workers Alliance from Springfield, Auburn and Carlnville, formed at the courthouse. They tramped to the Capitol building. Placards and banners set forth these sentiments: "United We Eat, Divided We Starve;" "A Dollar An Hour—30 Hour Week," "Tax Wealth, Not Misery." The latter protest was against the measures before the House. They would boost the sales tax from 2 to 3 per cent.

Gerry Allard, former editor of the Progressive Miner, led the committee of five which presented the Governor with ten demands—principally that the Legislature appropriate general revenue funds to reopen the relief dispensaries. The Governor informed them passage of the sales tax bills was the only hope.

State-Wide Army.

The pickets then voted to return to their homes, organize a State-wide army of unemployed, march back to Springfield later in the week and camp at the Capitol until the relief stations are reopened.

"It seems to be the only lan-

Dead Girl Revived By Ontario Doctor

Child, 5, Recovering After Adrenalin Injection.

By the Associated Press.

Owen Sound, Ontario, May 7.—A 5-year-old girl who apparently died following an operation today was restored to life by an injection of adrenalin into her heart several minutes later and tonight was on the road to recovery.

Little Audrey Brown, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Raymond A. Brown, of Owen Sound, was operated on for double mastoid by Dr. A. F. Laird. A recent attack of scarlet fever had left her heart in a weakened condition.

A few minutes after the operation a nurse rushed to the doctor and told him the patient was dead.

Dr. Laird examined the child. He found no heart action and no breathing, he said, and the girl's eyes were glassy.

Hurriedly the physician injected nine drops of adrenalin into the heart. Audrey gasped and began to breathe. The physician and nurses began using other resuscitation methods and the child was revived.

Dirksen Attack On Judge Stirs Clash in House

By Leon Dure, Jr.

The House was treated to one of the liveliest floor fights of the year yesterday when young shaggy-headed Everett M. Dirksen, a Republican member of the Illinois delegation, brought impeachment charges against Judge Samuel Alschuler, a Wilson-appointed jurist of Chicago.

For almost an hour Democratic members of the delegation squirmed in their seats while Dirksen hurled accusations of "favoritism," "oppression" and "judicial misconduct" against the Federal circuit judge. Then they arose en masse.

Led by the dean of the House, Adolph J. Sabath, and a new but less vigorous leader, Michael L. (Mike) Igoe, they then descended upon Dirksen with pent-up vigor, charging "politics" and threatening proceedings against three other Chicago judges—Republicans.

Busy Day for All.

It was a long and busy day for all members of the Illinois delegation, 21 of whom sit on the Democratic side, and 6 of whom are numbered among the Republicans.

The Democratic contingent got up early to see Harry L. Hopkins, the relief administrator, about resuming Federal relief grants to that State, which recently was cut off. The Republicans got up even earlier on the same mission, the Democrats discovered to their disgust, and already had informed Chicago of their efforts.

After the Democrats conferred with Hopkins, they, too, got off a telegram to Illinois, urging immediate action by the Legislature to meet Hopkins' requirements.

Tempers already on edge were set off when Dirksen obtained the floor, as a matter of personal privilege, immediately after the House opening.

Charges Favoritism.

Specifically, he accused the Chicago judge of favoring the Pullman Co. and other defendants, in a suit brought by the Marshall Electric Co., of Elkhart, Ind. Involved in the case was a patent for devices to regulate and control electric current.

Immediately, Sabath defended Alschuler as "one of the most honorable, efficient and honest judges of any court of our land." He threatened to pursue charges against

U. S. Speeds Two Billions In Aid Funds

Half of Amount Ready for Use as Soon as Projects Are Voted.

Housing, Roads, Grade-Crossing Elimination, Etc., Are Listed.

By Franklyn Waltman, Jr.

Taking the first step to get the new works-relief program into operation, President Roosevelt's Advisory Committee on Allotments yesterday segregated $2,000,000,000 of the $4,800,000,000 fund for immediate distribution to projects specified in the legislation.

The sum will be apportioned proportionally as specified by the Congressional classification and will be available for expenditure as soon as the projects are approved. The projects classified by Congress embrace highway construction, grade-crossing elimination, rural rehabilitation, rural electrification, low-cost housing and similar activities of a public works nature.

Segregation of $2,000,000,000 from the works fund was taken at a four-hour meeting of the advisory committee with President Roosevelt at the White House. Frank C. Walker, director of the National Emergency Council, in charge of information regarding the works program, made the announcement.

Schnepfe Named Secretary.

Mr. Walker also announced the appointment of Fred Schnepfe as executive secretary of the committee. He said the group had decided to meet regularly at the White House on Mondays and Thursdays until further notice.

Allocation of $2,000,000,000 of the works fund for the projects enumerated by the act decreases the unallocated fund to about $2,000,000,000—$800,000,000 having been ear-marked previously to supply direct relief to the Nation's destitute until the works program can be thrown into full operation.

The sums allocated were as follows:

Highways, roads, streets and grade-crossing elimination, $400,000,000.

Rural rehabilitation and relief in stricken agricultural areas, and water conservation, transmountain water diversion and irrigation and reclamation, $250,000,000.

Rural electrification, $50,000,000.

Housing, $225,000,000.

$150,000,000 for Professionals.

Assistance for educational, professional and clerical persons, $150,000,000.

Civilian Conservation Corps, $300,000,000.

Loans or grants or both, for projects of States, territories, possessions, including subdivisions and agencies thereof, municipalities and the District of Columbia and self-liquidating projects of public bodies thereof, where, in the determination of the President, not less than 25 per cent of the loan or the grant, or the aggregate thereof, is to be expended for work under each particular project, $450,000,000.

Gallows Waiting, McGee Gets Stay

McElroy Kidnaper Granted 3 More Weeks of Life.

Jefferson City, Mo., May 7 (AP).—A Kansas City gallows was ready and waiting for Kidnaper Walter McGee today—when Gov. Guy B. Park gave him three more wekes of life.

McGee's execution for the 1933 kidnaping of Miss Mary McElroy, 26-year-old daughter of City Manager H. F. McElroy of Kansas City, had been set for Friday.

Granting a stay to May 31, Gov. Park said he wanted more time "to go over the record" of the case, climaxed when the slender brunette victim made a tearful plea to the Governor for commutation of McGee's sentence to life imprisonment.

McGee yelled with delight when the news of the stay reached him in his death cell.

7 Miners Die as Boulder Falls Into Shaft, Hits Mounting Cage

By the Associated Press.

Wilkes-Barre, Pa., May 7.—Falling 200 feet into a cage being hoisted in a mine shaft, a large bowlder today killed seven miners in a colliery of the Glen Alden Coal Co. Three of the men are believed to have been killed by the impact. They and another man who died later were found in the badly battered cage after it was brought to the surface.

Three others fell from the damaged lift about 400 feet to the foot of the shaft. Officials expressed the opinion these men either were hurled from the cage by the men who were hit by the falling bowlder or jumped to their deaths in a frantic effort to escape.

The bowlder hit the ascending cage with such force that it ripped a big hole through its steel protection bonnet and tore a large opening in the floor made of three-inch planks.

Vibration of another cage which was descending while the cage containing the seven men was coming to the surface might have been responsible for the accident, mining men said.

Robert Owen died several hours after the accident.

The other dead were James Johnson, Orville Roberts, Richard

MAYOR HOWARD JACKSON.

Mayor Jackson Kept in Office; Lead Is 36,000

Cooling Beaten for Baltimore Council Chief; Amendment Loses.

By the Associated Press.

Baltimore, May 7.—Returns from 643 of 685 precincts in today's election gave Mayor Howard W. Jackson, Democrat, a lead of 36,319 over his Republican opponent, Blanchard Randall, jr.

Jackson's vote was 106,774, to 70,455 for Randall

George Sellmayer, Democratic nominee for president of the city council, had 92,592, as compared with 77,650 for S. Carle Cooling, Republican nominee.

The proposed amendment to the city charter which would have limited the city tax on real estate for general purposes exclusive of debt service to $1 per $100 valuation apparently was defeated by a majority of two to one.

Museum Wing Rejected.

The amendment to authorize the city council to expend $450,000 for a wing to the art museum to house a $2,000,000 art collection also apparently had been defeated. The vote was 66,799 against and 31,828 for.

The Jackson-Randall campaign was hotly contested all the way, but received added impetus in the closing days when one Democratic woman leader contended that Randall should not be elected because he spoke with an "English accent" and opened his campaign with a "tea party."

War Record Cited.

Republican women answered, and for several days the "tea party" contest raged. Republicans pointed to Randall's war record—he was decorated with the Croix de Guerre and was a captain overseas—to offset the "tea-drinking" charge.

Gov. Harry W. Nice, who presided over the conference that settled on Randall as the Republican nominee, came from Annapolis to cast his last vote in Baltimore for four years. Under the constitution, he became a resident of Annapolis upon his inauguration January 9, but as that was less than six months ago, he was eligible to vote in this election.

Daughter Joins Col. Rogers.

New York, May 7. (AP).—Mrs. Arturo J. P. Ramos, the former Millicent Rogers, arrived from Paris today to be at the bedside of her father, Col. H. H. Rogers, seriously ill in Johns Hopkins Hospital, Baltimore, Md. She was accompanied by her husband.

Fears Lulled, Chiefs Press Security Bill

President Firm; Harrison Asks Ruling From Cummings.

Senate Report Due This Week Despite Rail Reversal.

By the Associated Press.

Out of initial Administration fears that the latest Supreme Court decision had endangered vital New Deal proposals yesterday emerged a fresh determination by Roosevelt followers to press the social security program toward the statute books.

Second thoughts obviously eased many minds of apprehension lest the high court's invalidation of the railway pension act threatened the President's security bill—and possibly NRA also—with a label of unconstitutionality.

Some disagreed, but prevailing opinion from the White House to the Capitol apparently crystallized in holding that the security bill would not be affected because it is based primarily on constitutional grounds other than those which condemned the railway retirement act.

Roosevelt Stands Firm.

Observers drew this conclusion from a series of developments:

1. The White House left no doubt that President Roosevelt was standing firmly upon his recommendations for security legislation, despite the court's pronouncement.

2. Donald R. Richberg, presidential adviser and NRA chairman, informed congressional leaders that in his opinion the security bill was not endangered by the railway verdict.

3. Senator Wagner (Democrat), New York, from the floor asserted that, while the rail act was declared unsustained by the "due process" and commerce clauses of the Constitution, the security legislation was based upon the power of Congress to tax and spend.

4. Chairman Harrison of the Senate Finance Committee, which has the security bill under consideration, announced that Attorney General Cummings had been asked for an interpretation of the court's opinion as it might be applied to the legislation in question.

Board to See Eastman.

5. Members of the Railroad Retirement Board planned a conference soon with Joseph B. Eastman, coordinator of transportation, on the possibility of drafting a new retirement act or of including railway workers in the social security bill, a course suggested by Wagner.

6. Chairman Doughton, of the House Ways and Means Committee, told reporters he thought there was no connection between the two but added: "Of course, I'm not a lawyer."

7. A member of the committee, after hearing Richberg, said that the "fact we're not going to do anything about it ought to be a good enough indication that we're not worried about the constitutionality of the social security bill."

There were numerous private statements, generally but not all to the same effect. Some clung to a belief that the security bill was invalid. They said that, whether by taxes or not, the principle of collecting money from one class to distribute it to another—condemned by a majority of the court—was present in the security bill.

Against this contingency, the American Federation of Labor's executive council determined to propose a constitutional amendment, if necessary, to get through a railroad retirement plan and the security bill.

Patman Bonus Passed By Senate, 55-33; Veto Seen to Doom Pay Now

Talmadge Would Cut U. S. Pay In Half, Including President's

'Alphabets' First on List, He Says, Amid Clicking Cameras.

By the United Press.

"And another thing," said Gov. Eugene Talmadge of Georgia, "I would cut the President's pay in half."

The Klieg lights made him blink behind his shell-rimmed glasses. Photographers weren't sure whether his hair was combed or not; one lock fell down in his eyes.

"Let it alone," the Governor told them, "it's always that way."

You couldn't exactly call it an interview. The Governor was in his hotel suite trying to pose for pictures, answer the phone and talk about the state of the Nation all at once.

No matter where the conversation skipped and skittered, Talmadge always steered it back to his favorite subject—his accusation that President Roosevelt is ruining the country. This was the fire-eater from the South, the man who says he is trying to convince the Democrats that they had better not nominate Roosevelt in 1936; the man who attacks the President where he is supposed to be strongest—his adopted State of Georgia.

"Me," said the Governor, "I'm pleasure tripping and crusading. I was down at Louisville for the Derby. Reached right out and picked Omaha."

"Then what?"

"I got right on his nose. So I rode back to Washington with Jim Farley. You know a lot of people waste time giving these alphabet

Harrison, Vinson Bills Both Pushed Aside in Strategy Move.

McAdoo and Long Lead Floor Fight

White House Rejection Will Be Sustained, Senator Predicts.

By Robert C. Albright.

A $2,201,934,710 inflationary bonus bill was placed squarely up to the President yesterday by a veteran-stampeded Senate, which defied and invited a veto in its headlong rush toward passage.

Upsetting all conservative forecasts, the expansionist Patman measure, already approved by the House, was swept to final enactment by a 55-to-33 vote, after the Senate had swiftly thrust aside both the Harrison compromise and the Vinson substitute.

The final count fell shy of the two-thirds vote necessary to override a presidential veto.

A former Democratic Secretary of the Treasury, Senator William Gibbs McAdoo, of California, whose Chicago convention strategy started Roosevelt down the road to the White House, dramatically contributed to the Patman victory.

Denies It's Inflationary.

In a speech carefully timed before the vote McAdoo denied the House measure was inflationary, said it would not impair America's "matchless credit" and indorsed the plan to pay off the bonus with non-interest-bearing Treasury notes.

Passage was clinched when one Administration stalwart after another cast their ballots for the Patman plan, not because they wanted the bill or agreed with the McAdoo logic, but because the President has promised to veto it. They believe they can sustain that veto.

Louisiana's "Kingfish," Huey Long, assumed the four stars of the Patman floor plan general in the march toward passage, working hand-in-hand with Senator Elmer Thomas, of Oklahoma, Senate inflationist leader. The pair enthusiastically accepted the support of McAdoo, advised with him, agreed to accept any amendments he might offer.

The Californian offered one amendment, a sinking fund amortization plan to retire the bonus currency over a 20-year period, but finally withdrew it after a storm of floor controversy.

The American Legion, which had been supporting the Vinson bill, immediately threw its full strength behind the measure passed by the Senate.

"We respectfully ask that there

U. S. Spending Of 6 Billions Near a Record

New Peace Time Mark in Prospect Offset by Leap in Receipts.

By the United Press.

A new peace-time spending record by the Federal Government was in prospect last night for the curent fiscal year, with Treasury figures showing expenditures in little more than ten months in excess of $6,000,000,000.

In the current fiscal year from July 1, 1934, to May 4, 1935, total Government expenditures amounted to $6,012,958,000, compared with expenditures of $5,939,500,748 in the corresponding period of the previous record fiscal year.

Heavy relief costs, which already have mounted above the billion-dollar mark, were largely responsible. Only a small portion of the new $4,000,000,000 works-relief appropriation was reflected in the spendings.

Summary Shows Figures.

A summary of the Government's fiscal operations in the curent fiscal year from July 1, 1934, to May 4, 1935, compared with the corresponding period of the previous fiscal year, is shown by the Treasury as follows:

	This fiscal yr.	Last fiscal yr.
Total expenditures	$6,012,958,246	$5,939,500,748
Deficit (borrowed)	2,867,464,135	3,379,972,340

Although Government expenditures are continuing to mount because of the needs of the recovery program, these figures show that the Treasury for the first time since the start of the depression has been having some success in bringing Government receipts more in line with expenditures.

Expenditures so far this year have increased slightly more than 1 per cent over a year ago, while Government receipts, swollen by higher income and liquor tax collections, have gained 22 per cent, thereby reducing the deficit compared with

National Steel In $50,000,000 Bond Registry

$9,000,000 of Issue Going for Plant Expansion, S. E. C. Informed.

The National Steel Corporation yesterday filed with the Securities and Exchange Commission a registration statement for an issue of $50,000,000 first mortgage sinking fund, 30-year, 4 per cent bonds—the largest issue to be registered thus far by an industrial corporation not in reorganization.

Approximately $9,000,000 of the proceeds of the bond issue will constitute new capital financing by the National Steel, one of the largest steel companies in the country. The remainder will be used to refund existing indebtedness.

The company plans to retire $37,000,000 of first mortgage 5 per cent bonds at a redemption price of 105. In addition it is proposed to advance $2,216,666.63 to the Weirton Coal Co., a wholly owned subsidiary, to discharge its first mortgage by not later than next January 1.

Expects to Complete Plant.

According to the satement of the SEC, the balance of the proceeds of the bond issue will be used for additional working capital and to reimburse in part the fundable portions of capital expenditures, "the largest porion of which, it is anticipated, will be made in connection with the construction and installation of the wide continuous strip steel sheet mill being constructed by the Great Lakes Steel Corporation, a wholly owned subsidiary at its Ecorse, Detroit, Mich., plant."

A sinking fund will operate for the new bonds at the rate of $1,000,000 annually. The company claimed total assets of $232,461,249 and informed the SEC that the new bond issue would represent the only funded debt of the company. By the new issue the company saves $370,000 annually in interest on its

'Plutocrat' of Needy, Before N. Y. Inquiry Board, Admits Sending Family to Resort; Got $48,000 for City Hire of Iron Works.

By the Associated Press.

New York, May 7.—After three bankruptcies in the iron works business, Adolph Weiss testified today, he went on the relief pay roll and soon was able to buy his family fur coats, automobiles and a trip to the country.

Weiss, red-faced and belligerent, told the aldermanic committee investigating relief administration a story that moved Vice Chairman Joseph E. Kinsley to remark:

"We are now hearing the plutocratic side of relief."

In addition to obtaining a $45 a week relief job for himself, as well as jobs for some of his relatives, Weiss said he contracted with the parks department for the use of his "bankrupt" shop to turn out playground equipment.

Following him on the stand, Accounts Commissioner Paul Blanshard testified the Weiss Iron Works had received work tickets for equipment hire totaling $48,000, while "Mr. Weiss himself values this equipment at approximately $14,000 and he may be overstating the value of his own equipment."

Weiss, whose testimony drew rounds of laughter from the spectators, said that while he was receiving $45 and his son $33 from the parks department his family was living in a seven-room apartment at a rental of $75 a month.

"Did you buy your wife a $450 fur coat?" asked Lloyd P. Stryker, committee counsel.

"Sure I did," he replied. "I bought four fur coats. One of them was for $375 and another for $150."

"And did you buy an automobile?"

"Sure, I bought two automobiles," he said. He paid $1,648 for one, he added, and $830 for the other.

The witnesses testified that he had sent his family on a ten-day trip to Lakewood, N. J., at a cost of $511.

Treasury Clerk, Secret Bride, Ends Life in Gas-Filled Room

Mrs. Pearl Cahall Utterbaugh, 35, bride of a month, committed suicide in her apartment at 3023 Fourteenth street northwest yesterday.

Her marriage was revealed in a note which she left for police. It said:

"Please notify W. H. Utterbaugh, 312 A street southeast or Navy Yard, about this. We were married a month ago at Westminster, Md."

Mrs. Utterbaugh, who was known in the apartment as Mrs. Cahall, was a clerk in the Treasury Department.

Her 9-year-old daughter, Jean Cahall, discovered the tragedy when she returned home from school. She could not get into the apartment and noticed the odor of gas.

Attendants opened the room and found Mrs. Utterbaugh lying in the kitchen, unconscious. Gas was flowing from four jets in the stove while windows and doors were stuffed with paper and cloth.

Police could learn no motive for Mrs. Utterbaugh's act. In a short note to her daughter she said, "I hate to do this, but I am unhappy."

In the note she also directed her daughter's attention to her pocketbook, which contained two diamond rings, a wedding ring, a watch and $24, saying she was to have them.

Manila Hears Rumor of Plot To Kill Quezon

Police Checking Extremists Movements; Arrests in Revolt at 500.

By the Associated Press.

Manila (Wednesday), May 8.—Arrests from the Sakdalista uprising mounted to 500 today as the constabulary was kept busy tracing rumors, including one from Cavite that a plot to assassinate Manuel Quezon, president of the insular senate, and other Filipino leaders had been uncovered.

Salud Algabre, a woman "general," involved in the insurrection, blamed heavy taxes and oppression for the revolt, which took 60 lives in severe fighting last week.

"My husband was jailed once for failure to pay the cedular (poll tax) of 2 pesos," she said. "When we borrowed from the landlord he charged us a peso and 15 centavos for every peso loaned."

Says Ramos Issued Call.

She declared Benigno Ramos, Filipino leader now in Japan, directed the uprising through local leaders. She changed her previous testimony before officals at Cabuyao, where 52 rebels were slain, and absolved two representatives of the Philippine house, Aurelio Almazan and Mariano Untivero, of urging the Sakdalistas to revolt.

Acting Governor General Joseph R. Hayden meanwhile appointed a committee of four Army officers, all members of his staff, to investigate whether the Sakdalista movement, which seeks immediate independence, may have gained adherents from Philippine Scouts, who are Filipino members of the United States Army.

"The possibility is not taken seriously, but it will be probed along with other angles of last week's uprising," Hayden said.

Filipino legislators criticized Hayden and Governor General Frank Murphy, who is in the States.

Murphy Policy Hit.

Murphy's policy of retrenchment to balance the insular budget was blamed by Representative Alfonso Mendoza as a factor in the uprising. Mendoza urged a special session of the Legislature to enact public works laws.

Mrs. Algabre said she believed if the Filipinos did not rise against the Government before the Commonwealth was established the Sakdalista cause would be lost.

A plebiscite will be held Tuesday on adoption of a constitution under which the Commonwealth government would function about ten years before full freedom is gained from the United States.

Bodies of Youths, Girls Reveal Motor Tragedy

Houlton, Me., May 7 (U.P.).—A week-end motoring tragedy in which four persons—two youths and two girls—lost their lives was revealed belatedly today when their bodies were found between Richmond and Woodstock, in New Brunswick, 13 miles from here.

The dead, all New Brunswick residents, are Gordon and Joseph Shaw, both of Hartland; Margaret James, 19, of Lindsey, a cousin of Gordon Shaw, and Jennie Gartley, 21, Richmond.

McAdoo Swings The Tide; Watson Opposed To Hoover Candidacy; FHA Business Gains.

By Raymond Clapper

YOU wouldn't think, looking at the tall, lean, neatly dressed figure of Senator William Gibbs McAdoo that he was 71 years old or that he had led the life he has.

Thirty years ago he built the first tubes under the Hudson River. Twenty years ago he was Secretary of the Treasury and destined, during the war, to raise more money through bond issues than anyone before him or since, and to operate the Nation's railroads. Eleven years ago as a candidate for the Democratic presidential nomination he tied the New York national convention into such a tight knot in a death struggle with Alfred E. Smith that the party didn't recover until Herbert Hoover came along. Three years ago next month he threw the Democratic residential nomination, even then regarded as equivalent to election, to Franklin D. Roosevelt.

And yesterday he made one of the few Senate speeches which has changed the course of events. McAdoo swung the tide to the Patman bonus measure and brought this direct bonus payment bill directly before the White House for Mr. Roosevelt to accept or to veto.

• • • •

There were many complicating factors in the Senate's bonus action. One was the flood of telegrams inspired by Father Coughlin, who wanted the Patman bill. Another was the manœuver of Administration Senators, who, seeing defeat for the Harrison compromise, which the Administration would have accepted, desired to send in an extreme bill to give Mr. Roosevelt the easiest possible veto set-up. Another factor was the coolness of all veterans' organizations toward the Harrison bill and the desire of a majority of Senators to be on record somewhere along the line as having voted for full and immediate payment of the bonus.

• • • •

But it was McAdoo who tipped the balance. He did it by his speech. Seldom rising to his feet, he took the floor unexpectedly yesterday, and in a few broad heavy strokes, succeeded in painting over the Patman bill and making this alleged inflationary measure seem like the essence of economy and conservatism by comparison with the wilder Vinson bill, which the American Legion sponsored.

The Patman bill provides for immediate and full cash payment of the bonus through issue of $2,000,000,000 in Treasury notes or greenbacks, which would be automatically retired over 20 years.

The so-called milder Vinson bill would provide the same cash payment but leave the Treasury discretion to issue interest-bearing bonds with which to raise the money.

Roughly speaking, the wild boys favored the Patman bill, the more cautious ones the Vinson bill.

McAdoo reversed the popular impression. He said the Vinson plan would require the Government to pay $66,000,000 in interest annually. At the end of 20 years the Government would have paid $1,320,000,000 in interest and still owe the original $2,200,000,000 in bonds. But under the Patman bill the Treasury could set aside $81,000,000 a year toward canceling the greenbacks and in 20 years the whole issue would have been wiped out and the debt paid in full. Immediate issue of $2,000,000,000 in currency would, he said, be only a handful of sand on the seashore. It was persuasive. But the vote fell short of the two-thirds that would be necessary to override a veto. There will come the real tussle.

Former Senator James E. Watson, Republican Senate leader in the Hoover Administration, has joined those who want a new candidate next year.

"I do not think Mr. Hoover will be nominated or can be," he wrote a friend recenty. "He made a much better President than the people gave him credit for being. It would require a vast deal of work to overcome the ill-impression of him and there is no use for the Republican Party to start out on a campaign of this character when equally competent men may be found who can start out from taw without those impediments."

• • • •

A group of pickaninnies swarmed on the Capitol while the Supreme Court was hearing the Schechter poultry case. A guard asked them what they wanted.

"We heard the Government is going to give away free chickens," the ringleader said.

• • • •

One visitor to Palo Alto reports that Herbert Hoover apparently is hoping for the best but expecting the worst. The former President is said to have bought up a quantity of mortgaged land at tax sales and plans to defer payment of the mortgages in the expectation that inflation is just around the corner. That is, you might say, a hedge against his recent statement urging a return to the gold standard.

• • • •

Telegraph companies report one of the heaviest floods of telegrams in their history at Washington as a result of Father Coughlin's radio plea for the Patman bonus bill. One office has handled about 97,000 Coughlin telegrams addressed to Senators and Representatives.

• • • •

Despite considerable internal dissension following the absence on leave of Administrator James A. Moffett, the Federal Housing Administration did its biggest day's business yesterday. It insured $2,200,000 in mortgages under Title II, a third of which was for new construction.

Agriculture officials are watching the demonstration of the new mechanical cotton picker with mingle emotions. If it proves practical it will be as revolutionary as Eli Whitney's cotton gin, enabling one machine to do the work of possibly a hundred cotton pickers. The machine will go into production next year. If successful, it will reduce the cost of production for cotton but it will also add to the problem of surplus labor in the South.

• • • •

Former Governor Max Gardner of North Carolina won't conduct the Government investigation of the American Telegraph & Telephone Co., after all. His cotton textile clients won't let him quit them in the middle of the fight against the Administration processing tax. So President Roosevelt will release him and engage someone else to conduct the $750,000 Communications Commission inquiry. It is an opportunity for any lawyer. A. T. & T. has never been subjected to a Federal inquiry in its 50 years' history.

2 Jury Commissioners Named by D. C. Court

The justices of the District Supreme Court yesterday announced the selection of William E. Pearson, 2404 Wyoming avenue northwest, and Mrs. Ella Henderson West, 2519 Fourteenth street northwest, as jury commissioners. They will act with Adam Weschler, the third member of the commission, whose term holds over.

Pearson will succeed Horace G. Smith, real estate operator, and Mrs. West will supplant Edwin C. Graham, industrialist, whose terms expired yesterday. Both the new appointees will serve 3-year terms. Their duties are to supervise the selection of jurors who are to serve in all the courts of the District.

Beg Pardon.

Due to an inadvertence, Justice Harlan F. Stone was represented in the latter part of The Washington Post's report yesterday on the Supreme Court decision on the railroad retirement act as assailing provisions of that measure. The first part of the story made it plain that Justice Stone voted with the minority, which upheld the constitutionality of the retirement act. The Post regrets the error.

rivers and harbors and miscellaneous projects, $175,000,000.

Specific project allotments were discussed by the committee, but final action on them was deferred pending further examination. Secretary Ickes submitted a list of projects calling for about $100,000,000 already approved by the PWA.

The committee will meet again Monday. Yesterday's session was the first held by the allotment committee and a good part of the time was devoted to a discussion of the committee's duties and the part it will play in speeding the works program in order to put 3,500,000 persons to work as quickly as possible.

President Roosevelt outlined objectives he had in mind while Secretary Ickes explained that the committee should concentrate on advancing projects in areas where there is large unemployment in order to lighten relief rolls. He presented a preliminary map of 320 employment areas.

Types Discussed.

The committee also discussed types of applications and methods whereby they could be expedited. A resolution was adopted providing that transfer of personnel to new or expanded agencies under the works program shall be made only through the heads of the agencies involved and then at no increase in salary, Mr. Walker asserted. He added that persons thus transferred would be ineligible for salary increases for six months.

The meeting was attended by 20 members of the committee, including the Secretaries of Agriculture and Labor, in addition to Secretary Ickes; Harry L. Hopkins, administrator of the Works Progress Administration; Mr. Walker, Daniel W. Bell, acting director of the budget; Rexford G. Tugwell, administrator of the Resettlement Administration; Mayor Fiorello H. LaGuardia, representing the Conference of Mayors, and the chiefs of various agencies and bureaus.

Madge Reese Will Speak.

Miss Madge J. Reese of the United States Department of Agriculture, will give an illustrated lecture on Hawaii at a meeting of the Parent-Teacher Association of the Takoma-Silver Spring Junior High School and Montgomery Blair Senior High School tonight.

The alliance decided to inform Washington authorities the Illinois government has "broken down."

At Chicago, Lockner and the others were arrested by a detective squad as they appeared at the scene of a scheduled demonstration. They were picked out of a crowd of 100 who had gathered to demand resumption of relief activities before what they believed was the home of State Representative Benjamin Adamowski, leader of the Democratic movement to enact the increase in sales tax.

Forty policemen were assigned to the Logan boulevard address where the group was to have assembled. The representative lives in another district, but his home was guarded by 30 patrolmen. Four other officers were assigned to the residence of Adamowski's mother.

Police had previously refused to issue a permit for the demonstration and had ordered the detention of all known agitators.

At the same time, three women and four men who were picketing one of Chicago's closed relief offices were arrested for disturbing the peace.

The Illinois emergency relief commission, without finances since cut off the Federal allotment lists, announced 88 of the State's 102 counties had no commission-supplied moneys.

Thousands of persons were forced to shift for themselves or to rely upon private charity or such makeshift arrangements as communities could improvise. Officials frankly admitted many clients had entered the "state of suffering" while hosts of others were moving "closer and closer to the hunger line."

About 20 children were made fatherless by the accident.

Edward Griffith, vice president of Glen Alden, said officials have not determined exactly how the accident occurred.

The South Wilkes-Barre colliery has been a "storm center" in a strike of United Anthracite Miners of Pennsylvania, which started last February.

All of the men killed and injured were members of the United Mine Workers of America, from which the united anthracite group split two years ago in a controversy over policy.

U. S. Colonists' Children Quarantined on Ship

Seward, Alaska, May 7 (AP).—Minnesota's drought-fleeing colonists set foot on the land of their dreams today, but were prevented by illness among their children from journeying to their future homes in the Matanuska Valley.

An outbreak of measles on the transport St. Mihiel kept all children under 12 years old under quarantine aboard ship and the parents remained close at hand. The settlers, who arrived last night from San Francisco, had hoped to start today for the site of the Government's colonization experiment.

Hurley Sees Good Omen In Many Aspirants

St. Paul, Minn., May 7 (AP).—Patrick J. Hurley, Secretary of War under President Hoover, expressed optimism today on Republican chances to elect a President in 1936.

The reason:

"Six months ago," he said, "you couldn't find a Republican who wanted to make the sacrifice as a candidate for President. Now, so far as I know, I am the only adult member of the party who is not a candidate for President."

Owner of Lunchroom Fined for Gunplay

George Evados, lunchroom proprietor, was accused in Police Court yesterday of firing several shots at four men who allegedly failed to pay for food at his restaurant in the 1900 block of Fourteenth street northwest.

It was testified the men ordered 90 cents worth of food and then started to walk out without paying. Evados seized a revolver and started firing.

"I guess those fellows are still running," he told Judge John P. McMahon.

So Evados was fined $10 for unlawfully discharging firearms. He escaped an assault with a dangerous weapon charge because the four patrons could not be found.

There developed also a possibility that, as a result of the pension decision, the Association of American Railroads may seek a court test of the 1933 emergency railroad act if it is extended. This law, which forbids reducing employment more than 5 per cent below the May, 1933, level, expires automatically June 16.

Cummings' Friend Extortion Target

Youth Held in $250,000 Plot Against Kemper.

By the Associated Press.

Kansas City, May 7.—A friend of United States Attorney General Cummings — wealthy James M. Kemper—was disclosed today as the target of a crude $250,000 kidnap-extortion plot.

Edward E. Conroy, special agent of the Federal Bureau of Investigation here, revealed the plot in announcing that a jittery, shabbily-dressed youth who said he was Peter Warren, 20, of Dallas, Tex., has been held since May 3.

Charges of attempting to extort the money from Kemper, president of the Commerce Trust Co., and son of W. T. Kemper, Democratic national committeeman for Missouri, were filed by United States District Attorney Maurice M. Milligan.

The accused man pleaded not guilty before a United States commissioner and waived preliminary hearing. He was held in $25,000 bond for the Federal grand jury—now in session.

Warren was arrested, Conroy said, when a Federal trap closed as he met Kemper in the Country Club section of Kansas City to receive two suitcases supposed to contain the $250,000.

Missing Texas Couple Found Dead in Auto

San Antonio, Tex., May 7 (AP).—Crumpled in their car on a deserted country lane, the bodies of Mr. and Mrs. Charles M. Leake, sr., prominent San Antonians, were found today after a 24-hour search.

Leake, owner of a printing company, was found in the front seat of the machine, a pistol in his lap. His wife's body was lying on the back seat.

Justice of the Peace W. K. Shipman decided Leake shot himself and his wife.

From 1907 until 1910 Dr. Davis was connected with the Washington Y. M. C. A., and then went to Istanbul as secretary of the organization there. During the World War he served with the allied armies in Europe.

Mrs. Mortimer Stabler, Ednor, Md., will speak at the meeting of the Burtonsville Homemakers' Club May 20 at the home of Mrs. Herbert Thompson, Spencerville, Md. Her subject will be the "Home Garden." Miss Edythe M. Turner, home demonstration agent, will speak on "The Flower Border."

Why Is Mr. Brown So Perturbed?

Because his home needs repairing and remodeling; his bank roll is low, and he hasn't read about how J. Frank Kelly, Inc., is helping homeowners with a FHA approved plan of financing home improvements. How about your own home?

The photographer said yes.

Governor Wears His Coat.

"The Governor sure don't look like he does when he's campaigning," remarked the heavy-set man on the divan. "He's got his coat on now."

"Roosevelt's gonna licked in Georgia all right in 1936," Talmadge said. "All this Government wants to do is raise taxes. They sent down a stack of bills from Washington and said for our Legislature to pass 'em. I stuck 'em in a drawer. One of 'em got out of that drawer somehow and passed the Legislature. I vetoed that one.

"Yes, siree, this Government is too rich. The best kind of government you can get is a poor one. Write that down, will you?"

"That's a new thought in politics that you're writing down now," said the heavy-set man.

"• • • Yeh, we could cut out nine-tenths of the money they're spending here in Washington," Talmadge went on. "After they get rid of the alphabets, they ought to cut everybody's pay in half. I'd start out with the President.

Assails Ballyhoo.

"The Government oughtn't to be nothing anyway except an umpire. That's what the Government down in Georgia is. I cut taxes down there and Hopkins keeps fussing with me about it. All you got up here is a gimme Government."

"You sure are the only fellow in Washington right now that's talking that way, Governor," said the heavy-set man. "You stay up here a week and you'll begin to believe what the alphabets say."

"I know it, that's why I'm going home tonight," Talmadge said. "You hear a lot of ballyhoo (he pronounced it 'bally-hoe') around here. Hear it down in our country, too. They got 23 newspaper fellows working for the Government in Georgia. Some of 'em gets sent over to Europe to talk to the crowned heads."

"Does Harry Hopkins know you are in town, Governor?"

"Sure, he knows."

"Have you seen him?"

"Nope. I haven't seen any of the alphabets."

It was time for lunch. Everybody went down to the lobby and a newspaper man said, "I got to phone some of this in."

"Don't phone anything," Talmadge said. "Sit down and write out what I said on paper. So long."

Frederick Group Asks Paving of Highway Gap

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Frederick, Md., May 7.—About 25 property owners of the northern section of the county asked the county commissioners yesterday to complete a stretch of four miles of highway from near Wolfsville to the Washington County line. While the roads system is under the supervision of the State the commissioners have the authority to recommend construction.

The delegation was headed by Charles M. Kline, former member of the General Assembly, and Irving R. Stottlemyer. Mr. Kline explained that while the Legislature authorized the construction of the road in 1917 the four-mile link has not been completed. Completion would give a hard surface highway from the National Highway at Middletown to Waynesboro, Greencastle and the Lincoln Highway at Chambersburg.

The delegates included C. Upton Grossnickle, Charles C. Wolf, Oscar R. Brandenburg, William Brandenburg, Ivan Harshman, Samuel Blickenstaff, Earl Sensenbaugh, Peter Tracy, A. R. Kline, John Biser, Charles DeLauter, Stanley Grossnickle, Levin Lewis, William Leibold, Asa P. Stottlemyer and Preston Frey.

Artist's Mother, Daughter Die With 2 Others as Home Burns

Seven Others Injured in Holocoust at La Valle's Boston Mission; Blaze Damage Estimated at $25,000.

By the Associated Press.

Boston, May 7.—Four persons perished today in a fire which swept the four-story Back Bay mansion of John La Valle, internationally known portrait artist, world war bombing pilot and grandson of a former dictator of the Argentine republic.

Two victims were his crippled 70-year-old mother, Mrs. John La Valle, Sr., sister of Mrs. Curtis Guild, a widow of a former governor of Massachusetts, and La Valle's daughter, Alice, 14.

The two others were Miss Mary Dolan, 24, and Miss Kathleen Costello, 25, maids. Crazed by burns, they lost their grip on fourth floor window sills and fell to the pavement.

Seven others were injured, including two other daughters of LaValle, Ellen Elaine, 6, and Mary, 13, who suffered critical injuries in leaps to safety.

LaValle nor his second wife, the former Virginia Wilson, of Cincinnati, daughter of Robert Wilson, tobacco trade multi-millionaire, were at home.

Others injured in the fire, which officials estimated to have caused $25,000 damage to the residence besides ruining a number of objects of art, included: Mary McLeod, nurse to Mrs. LaValle, sr.; Molly O'Reilly, 25, a cook, and two firemen.

The only member of the LaValle family to escape was 10-year-old John LaValle, who leaped to a soft bit of lawn, after screaming to awaken his sisters.

Nepotism Is Banned By Relief Director

By the Associated Press.

Richmond, Va., May 7.—Virginia Emergency Relief Administrator William A. Smith today instructed area administrators to advise him of cases where two or more members of the same household are in administrative work in the VERA organization or where married women are employed whose husbands also are working regularly.

"It is not the policy of this administration," Mr. Smith said, "to employ two or more members of the same household in administrative work, except in unusual circumstances where these individuals are specialists in fields essential to the relief program."

Salisbury's Chamber To Fete Merchant, 81

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Salisbury, May 7.—The annual membership dinner of the Salisbury Chamber of Commerce next Thursday will be a testimonial to Louis W. Gunby, dean of this city's mercantile tradesmen, and a civic leader for several decades.

Mr. Gunby, who is 81, is Salisbury's oldest active merchant. Entering the mercantile business at the age of 13 as a clerk in a hardware store, he opened his own hardware establishment in 1872 and has operated it continuously. He was one of the organizers and is now president of the Salisbury Building and Loan Association, an organizer and president of the Del-Mar-Va. Former Aid Would Name New Bureau Administrator

By the Associated Press.

Norfolk, Va., May 7.—The replacing of the Interstate Commerce Commission by a bureau headed by an administration appointed for 15 years, with power to regulate all forms of transportation, including the air and pipe lines, was advocated by Karl Knox Gartner, of Washington, former attorney-examiner of the I. C. C., in an address today before the Associatec Traffic Clubs of America at the Cavalier Hotel, Virginia Beach.

The present commission is outmoded by changing times and has become a bureaucracy, the speaker charged. He said uniform control of all transportation forms would equalize competition and be an asset in time of war.

Pay of Laborers on Relief Projects Cut

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Harrisonburg, Va., May 7.—Common laborers on relief projects in Rockingham County will receive only 15 cents per hour, beginning May 15, it was announced today by Raleigh C. Hobson, county relief director. The pay cut from 20 to 15 cents per hour was recommended by the county wage committee, which held that 15 cents was nearer the wage paid by private employers. The semi-skilled pay of 20 cents is unchanged.

There were 600 persons on relief work in Rockingham last month and the number is expected to dwindle with the pick-up in private outside work, including that on the farms.

Dr. Brock Hops In Rain to Set Flight Record

A driving rain that flooded parts of Washington Airport did not prevent Dr. John Brock, Kansas City oculist, from making his regular airplane flight yesterday. It was his 2,000th consecutive daily hop.

After the record-making flight Dr. Brock was tendered a luncheon at the Mayflower Hotel at which he was presented a Certificate of Merit by Charles F. Horner, of the National Aeronautic Association.

Among the aviation officials of the Government attending the luncheon were Eugene Vidal, director of the Bureau of Air Commerce, who spoke briefly; Maj. Gen. Benjamin D. Foulois, chief of the Army Air Corps, and Rear Admiral Ernest King, chief of the Bureau of Aeronautics of the Navy.

Dr. Willis Gregg, chief of the United States Weather Bureau, and Dr. Horner, of the N. A. A., were Dr. Brock's guests on his flight yesterday. John La Grone, of Kansas City, flew another ship filled with photographers. La Grone was Brock's flying instructor.

Although he delayed his take-off, Dr. Brock explained that the rainstorm did not bother him but that the photographers had asked that he wait until it cleared up so that they could get better pictures. The oculist's consecutive flight record is unequaled, as far as can be determined, by any aviation pilot in the world.

Reserve Board Calls Thurston As Special Aid

Post Staff Writer, Long Student of Banking, to Assume Duties Soon.

Elliott L. Thurston, of the editorial staff of The Washington Post, yesterday was appointed special assistant to the governor of the Federal Reserve Board. He will assume his new duties within a few days.

Thurston for several years has been a close student of banking and monetary developments and has written extensively on those subjects for The Washington Post. Due to his interest in banking and monetary matters he was selected as press officer of the American delegation to the London Economic and Monetary Conference in 1933.

Educated at Phillips Academy at Andover, Mass., and at Brown University, Thurston has been engaged in journalism for the last 20 years, except for a period during which he was associated with the National Bank of Commerce in New York. He started as a reporter with the Provdence Journal in 1915 and subsequently served as a member of the staff of the New York Sun.

Thurston came to Washington in 1922 as a member of the Washington staff of the New York World. Later he became the chief of the World bureau here and remained in that position until the World ceased publication in 1929. From 1929 to 1933 he served as the Washington correspondent of the Philadelphia Record.

He has been a frequent contributor to monthly and weekly periodicals, writing chiefly on economic, financial and monetary subjects. Shortly after his return from the London Economic and Monetary Conference, in 1933, he was engaged by The Washington Post as the first member of the National News Bureau, which this newspaper organized to cover the activities of the Federal Government. He gave to The Washington Post the distinguished service which has marked his career.

existing funded debt. The latter would be increased by $13,000,000, but the increased cost of the entire indebtedness will be only $150,000.

The information as to salaries of company officials filed with the SEC showed that Ernest T. Weir, director and chairman of the board of the National Steel Corporation, last year received $53,671.52 as compensation, George R. Fink, director and president of the Great Lakes Steel Corporation, received $53,643 and John C. Williams, director and president of the Weirton Steel Co., the Weirton Coal Co., and the Hanna Furnace Co., wholly-owned subsidiaries of the National Steel, received $53,671.34.

Options Held on Stock.

The information also revealed that Mr. Fink has a five-year option, dating from October 1, 1934, to purchase 20,000 shares of National Steel stock at $40 a share. George M. Humphrey, a director of the company, Mr. Weir and Mr. Williams held similar options to buy 5,000 shares each.

Filing of the National Steel registration statement aroused hopes that activity in the capital issues market will now resume and continue without abatement for several months. There was a distinct lull in the filing of registration statements during April, due chiefly to the requirement that such statements must contain a balance sheet for the last preceding quarter. Thus it was difficult for many corporations wishing to refund outstanding securities to complete their audits during April.

Although the largest single industrial issue of securities registered under the 1933 securities act, the National Steel's offering is not the largest of all types. Southern California Edison previously registered a $73,000,000 bond issue; Pacific Gas & Electric Co. has registered a $45,000,000 bond issue, and Swift & Co. a $43,000,000 issue. The Republic Steel Corporation filed a registration for four issues totaling $67,800,000 as a part of its reorganization plan.

Wrecked Plane Viewed by Jury In Crash Probe

Crippled Radio, Fog and Fuel Shortage Cited as Causes.

By the Associated Press.

Macon, Mo., May 7.—A crippled radio set, blinding fog before dawn and a dwindling gasoline supply were points presented today to a coroner's jury seeking to explain the death plunge of TWA's "luxury" night liner, the Sky Chief.

Nearing the close of the inquest, members of the jury viewed the bodies of the five dead—United States Senator Bronson Cutting, 46, of New Mexico; Miss Jeanne Anne Hillias, 20, Kansas City; Pilot Harvey Bolton, 28, Kansas City; Co-Pilot Kenneth Greeson, 24, Kansas City, and Mrs. William Kaplan, West Los Angeles, Calif.—who died early today.

Then the jury went to the scene of the widely scattered wreckage on a northeastern Missouri farm pasture, only 15 miles away from the emergency field at Kirksville, Mo., which the pilots were seeking when the crack-up came early yesterday.

All May Recover.

Two of the eight others injured remained in a serious condition here, but hospital physicians said all now "have a chance" to recover.

"Radio transmitter failed," was a notation in the eastbound transport's log which was presented to the jury by Manvel H. Davis, attorney for Transcontinental & Western Air.

"Two-way receiver weak," it added.

The plane had been instructed by radio while over the fog-hidden Kansas City Airport to continue to Kirksville, but was unable to reply as to whether the messages were received.

"The fog was awful—you can't depend on these damned radios," C. G. Drew, member of a Hollywood film technician group on the plane, was quoted by Everett Wiggans, a witness, as having mumbled when found.

Drew and Paul Wing, father of Toby Wing, screen actress, were the two whose condition remained critical.

Body Sent to New York.

The body of Senator Cutting, escorted to the train by American Legionnaires, was sent in a bronze casket to New York. Senator Cutting was bound for Washington at the time of the crash to join in debate for payment of the soldiers' bonus.

Other witness quoted Bolton, while near death, as gasping the explanation his gasoline tanks ran dry. T. W. A. officials reported finding 30 gallons in an auxiliary tank after the crash.

Ted Haueter, T. W. A. pilot, offered the theory that a gust of wind interfered with Bolton's plans to land on a level stretch.

Transcontinental & Western Air officials had said previously they believed the pilots were attempting to make a "precautionary landing" because the fuel was running low.

Pilot's Heroism.

Bolton's heroism was traced in the testimony.

Although in extreme pain, he told first arrivals not to bother with him but to tear doors off a nearby home and use them as stretchers for the injured passengers.

Tests completed in the T. W. A. laboratory at Kansas City today disclosed the radio transmitter of the airliner could have been used by switching to the day transmission frequency, officials said.

A lock nut was loose, preventing night transmission.

In efforts to communicate with the plane from the Kansas City ground station both day and night frequencies were used, it was added.

Federal Crash Inquiry Is Speeded by Roper

By the Associated Press.

Secretary Roper announced yesterday he hoped to make a preliminary report today on the TWA plane crash in which Senator Cutting was killed.

He dispatched by plane to the crash scene yesterday Denis Mulligan, chief of the enforcement section of the Bureau of Air Commerce, and R. W. Schroeder, air line inspection, chief.

The Commerce Secretary hoped to publish their findings this afternoon. He has empowered the officials to question witnesses and to learn the results of inquiries by the five Department of Commerce inspectors who arrived at the scene of the crash Monday.

Election Today To End Session Of B'nai B'rith

Bentwich, Former Attorney General of Palestine, to Be Speaker.

An address by Dr. Norman Bentwitch, formerly attorney general of Palestine, election of officers and presentation of committee reports will close the B'nai B'rith convention at the Willard Hotel today.

Dominating yesterday's session was a speech delivered by M. Gordon Liverman in which the president of District Grand Lodge, No. 15 (London, England), deplored the treatment of Jews in Germany and Poland. Mr. Liverman is head of the fraternal order's European committee.

Both politically and economically, he said, the large Polish-Jewish population is confronted with "suffering and misery that can not be exaggerated."

"In regard to Germany," he told the convention delegates, "I regret to say that the ruthless discrimination against the Jewish people still dominates the scene. Jews of the highest character whose families have lived in Germany for generations and who have contributed to her cultural development in every direction and even those who fought for Germany in the war are being eliminated from her public life and professions and reduced to a state of second-rate citizenship.

Telegrams lauding the work of the B'nai B'rith were received yesterday from Rabbi Stephen S. Wise, of New York; Everett R. Clinchy, director of the National Council of Jews and Christians; Morris Rothenberg, president of the Zionist Organization of America, and Morris D. Waldman, secretary of the American Jewish committee.

"Protestants, Catholics and Jews are coming to realize that they are faced by common enemies," said Mr. Clinchy, "in the form of bigotry organizations, Fascist groups, materialism, atheism and reaction. The social and economic unrest which faces us, together with the propaganda of subversive forces, makes us all concerned with the future."

Shrine Convention Fund Approved by Senate

The Senate late yesterday passed and sent to the President the supplemental District appropriation of $54,000 to enable the District Commissioners to make public order arrangements for the Shrine convention in June.

London, May 7 (AP).—Admiral Sir Ernle Chatfield will become the new admiral of the British fleet, succeeding Sir Roger J. B. Keyes, World War hero, the admiralty announced tonight.

Sir Roger will retire tomorrow. He is rated as one of the greatest British naval commanders of the World War, having received honors and 10,000 pounds (about $50,000) from parliament for bottling up a German submarine base at Zeesbrugge April 23, 1918. Government's Space Problem Grows Acute

Private Buildings in Demand Despite Record U. S. Construction.

The Federal office housing problem is growing more acute daily, it was admitted yesterday, due principally to the establishment of new emergency relief organizations and the need of other agencies to expand.

A. E. Demaray, associate director of the National Park Service, announced several pending moves with the comment that the space situation is becoming more and more complex. The Government, apparently, is depending on privately owned buildings more than ever before, although Federal construction here is at its highest point in history.

The Branch of Plan and Design, National Park Service, is scheduled to move from the Architects Building in the new seventh floor of the Interior Building across the street. Within a short time, the Interior Department's Subsistence Homestead Division will be transferred from the Architects Building, which will be razed this summer, to a private structure at Eleventh and G streets northwest.

The PWA Board of Labor Review and several engineering offices also are slated for eviction from the Architects Building, at Eighteenth and E streets, which will be the site of the new $10,000,000 Interior Building. Mr. Demaray did not say where they will be quartered.

Byrd Scientist Says Pole Isn't Health Resort

Germs Found in Antarctic Snows, Iowa College Professor Says.

By the Associated Press.

New York, May 7.—The conception of Little America as a health resort, because of germ-killing cold, was quickly characterized today as "romantic but untrue" by Dr. Thomas C. Poulter, senior scientist and second in command of the Byrd expedition.

Dr. Poulter, head of the science and mathematics department of Iowa Wesleyan College before his departure to the Antarctic in 1933, landed in New York today on the liner Santa Maria from Balboa, where he left the Byrd flagship, Jacob Ruppert.

Even the common cold, Dr. Poulter found, can be as inconvenient in Little America at 80 below zero as it can in his home town of Mount Pleasant, Iowa.

Expedition Never Boring.

"Our biologists examined many pieces of snow, gathered at distances from the camp, and in practically all of them they found bacteria of some sort, not all of which have been identified as yet," he said.

"And the men did get colds. There were no severe illnesses, but apparently the germs which cause cold infection can be active there, even if the men did take the germs with them."

Dr. Poulter was well satisfied with scientific results of the expedition, although it may take some time to correlate them, he said. At no time was the expedition "boring," he added.

Island Under Ice.

Considerable study of cosmic rays was undertaken by Dr. Erwin H. Bramhall, a collaborator of Dr. Arthur Compton, and Dr. Poulter said Bramhall's data "fits in with Dr. Compton's views."

"My own work," he explained, "was chiefly the study of the weather and of ice conditions as they affect weather. I made 500 soundings on the ice on the barrier. We found that the entire barrier is not afloat, as was supposed, but that much of it is grounded. There is one island under the ice 100 miles long and from 20 to 25 miles wide."

A Medical Center For Capital Urged

Dr. McKinley Addresses Visiting Nurses.

A medical center for Washington was urged yesterday by Dr. Earl B. McKinley, dean of the George Washington Medical School, in a speech at the one-day institute for the board of directors of the Instrutive Visiting Nurse Society. The meeting, attended by present and former board members and visiting delegates from nearby cities, was held at the home of Mrs. G. Howland Chase 3d, president of the society, at 1403 Thirtieth street northwest.

Dr. George C. Ruhland, health officer of the District, told members of the society there is a decided shortage of public health nurses here.

Others who addressed the society were Miss Ruth Hubbard, director of the Philadelphia Visiting Nurse Association; Judge Fay L. Bentley, of the Juvenile Court, and John Ihlder, director of the District Alley Dwelling Authority.

Ex-Wife Accused In Cannon Suit

Mrs. Smith Undaunted by Drinking Charge.

By the Associated Press.

Charlotte, N. C., May 7.—F. Brandon Smith, jr., flung a charge of repeated drunkenness against his divorced wife, Anne Cannon, today as he completed his testimony of family difficulties which led to his filing suit for $250,000 against her father, the wealthy Joe F. Cannon, of Concord, for alleged alienation of affections.

As the slim little Charlotte business man finished almost a full day in the witness chair, he declared his earning capacity was impaired during his life with her "because I couldn't 'tend to Anne drunk all night, and work all day."

Mrs. Smith, whose first husband was Smith Reynolds, the ill-starred tobacco fortune heir, was sitting only a few feet away, with her mother, but the charge made no visible impression upon her.

Young Smith insisted through direct and cross-examination that his father-in-law had become angered when the Smiths wanted to take custody of Anne Cannon Reynolds, infant daughter of her first marriage, and had used the baby as a means of creating a rift between him and his wife.

...vish Rally to Set Stage for Fund Drive

Volunteer workers in the United Jewish Appeal will launch formally a $35,000 drive at a mass meeting tomorrow night at Jewish Community Center. The three-week canvass for funds will start Friday morning, with all leading Jewish organizations of the city participating. Funds raised will go for relief work of eastern European Jews, for settlement of German Jewish refugees in Palestine and for reconstruction of the Jewish homeland.

Wife Takes Adopted Boy to Jolson

With a great deal of shyness—so far as pictures of their adopted boy was concerned—Mrs. Al Jolson, sometimes known as Ruby Keeler, returned from Chicago to California. With her in this picture, taken yester, are Anna Christ, 5, a relative, and Ruby's sister, Helen Keeler.

Jolsons Adopt Chicago Baby; Ruby Bars Name, 'Sonny Boy'

By the United Press.

Chicago, May 7.—A youngster who has been in this world just seven weeks, and who lives in imminent danger of being nicknamed "Sonny Boy," was adopted today by Al Jolson and Ruby Keeler.

They will name him Albert Jolson, jr.

"We'll call him Sonny Boy," said Al, before leaving for New York yesterday.

"Not," said Ruby, "if I can help it." She took the baby with her by train, today to Encino, Calif., where the Jolsons are building a house. Al, jr., traveled in a beribboned basket. With him went such doters as Miss Helen Keeler, his new aunt, and Anna Christ, Ruby's 4-year-old cousin.

The baby met his parents yesterday for the first time when he was just a foundling at an Evanston nursery. Over his white crib bent a man who rose to fame on the high notes of a mammy song and a fair-haired young woman whose tap dancing made her a movie star.

"This feller has adopted us," said the mammy singer.

"He's scrumptious," said the tap dancer.

Al, jr.'s, formal adoption occurred before Assistant County Judge Charles T. Allen today, just 45 minutes before the infant was hustled aboard a train for California. The final decree is to be entered in two weeks, when formal notice of adoption is served the real mother.

May Find a Sister.

Miss Keeler, whose original idea was to adopt twins, indicated she might return shortly to find a brother or sister for Al, jr.

"We don't know what color his eyes will be yet," she said, "but I think he takes after Al. He has the same black hair. And they both have remarkable lung power."

Would Al make a mammy singer out of Junior?

"There's no telling what Al will try to do," said Ruby, "but the child will be protected."

Avalanche Follows Storm; 30 Killed

Estimates of Dead in Brazil Greatly Reduced.

By the Associated Press.

Bahia, Brazil, May 7.—Six homes rolled from a hillside under an avalanche today in storm-stricken Bahia and an estimated 30 persons were killed in the wreckage.

This city of 300,000 began clearing away the debris left by seven succeeding days of high wind and heavy rain, still wondering how many persons died in the greatest storm of its history.

Earlier estimates ranging as high as 400 were reduced as officials started their check of the dead, but many wandered about the city and its suburbs seeking missing relatives, and most reliable sources believed that at least 75 persons died in the city and is envorons.

Fish May Enter Presidential Race

Would Answer Call From West, He Asserts.

Omaha, Nebr., May 7 (AP).—Representative Hamilton Fish, jr., of New York, asserting he sensed a tremendous swing away from the Democratic Party, today said he might be a candidate for the Republican nomination for President.

This would be contingent, he said, on a call that would have to be made to him "on a basis of country and would have to come from the West."

The 47-year-old New York Republican said he knew the people would want a young man ... dent—one who is liberal and yet reaffirms and defends the Constitution.

He declared that in the next election "the only thing that can stop a Republican landslide is a temporary form of prosperity—such as inflation."

League Entry, Arms Embargo Urged in Senate

President Would Be Asked to Ban Gun Sales to Warring Nations.

By the Associated Press.

The rumble of war drums in Europe brought a double demand yesterday in the Senate that the United States join the League of Nations and that American guns be kept out of the hands of combatant nations.

An appeal for immediate adherence to the League of Nations was made by Senator Pope (Democrat), of Idaho. But scarcely had this long-fought issue been raised than one of its oldest and bitterest foes, Senator Johnson (Republican), of California, roared a warning that the United States will serve its interest best by "minding our own business."

Meantime, Senator Clark (Democrat), of Missouri, introduced in the Senate for himself and Chairman Nye (Republican), of North Dakota, of the Munitions Investigating Committee, a resolution directing that the President shut off from all warring nations any munitions supplies from the United States as long as this country remains a neutral.

It was the third of a trio of resolutions the two munitions investigators have presented to the Senate, the previous pair aiming at preserving neutrality by prohibiting loans to warring nations or to their naitonals and denying passports to citizens to enter war zones.

Introducing the league adherence resolution, Pope declared, "I am convinced this is an appropriate time to consider such a resolution."

He said he did not plan to press for immediate action, but cautioned that "disturbed conditions in Europe have created the fear that another great war may occur within the next few years."

When he finished quietly reading his speech, Senator Johnson arose to declare:

"We can keep out of war by minding our own business and precluding the possibility of America being propagandized by Europe."

The debate ended there.

Mysterious S O. S. Begins Futile Hunt

Distress Call Off Seabright May Have Been Hoax.

By the Associated Press.

New York, May 7.—Rain-swept and fog-bound waters of the "graveyard" of the Atlantic—20 miles off Seabright, N. J., where the Morro Castle and Mohawk met disaster—were searched futively today by Coast Guard vessels answering the distress call of an unidentified, mysterious ship.

As the search continued Coast Guard headquarters suspected that the distress call, picked up at New York and Bay Head, N. J., might be a hoax. The faint plea for help was intercepted by short-wave wireless at 40 degrees.

Authorities recalled that rum runners along the Atlantic coastal rum row frequently resorted to short-wave distress calls to draw Coast Guard cutters out of position.

In a general alarm the Coast Guard appealed to all shipping along the Atlantic seaboard to watch for the vessel.

Baptists Open Annual Session In Church Here

While peace is to be considered a Christian objective, only war can right some wrongs, Washington Baptists were told yesterday in National Baptist Memorial Church at the fifty-eighth annual meeting of the Columbia Association of Baptist Churches.

So declared the Rev. Thomas E. Boorde, former pastor at Temple Baptist Church, now a Sunday School worker, in delivering the association's annual sermon. His subject was "Authority."

"An American citizen should fight in defense of motherhood, home and the Nation securing for him and guaranteeing to him that which makes it possible for him to be 'fruitful, multiply and replenish the earth,'" said the Rev. Mr. Boorde.

Reports of activities in church societies and missions and other talks completed the program. Further reports and discussions will take place at concluding sessions today. The Rev. William H. Bowler, D. D., executive secretary of the board of missionary cooperation, Northern Baptist Convention; and the Rev. R. S. Jones, D. D., field representative of the foreign mission board, Southern Baptist Convention, will speak at the final meeting tonight.

House Petition Seeks to Force 16-1 Silver Vote

White, Idaho, Starts Move But Other Backers Lack Hope.

By the Associated Press.

Expressing optimism publicly, but privately appearing not so hopeful, congressional silverites yesterday renewed efforts designed to triple the present price of silver.

The latest move was filing of a petition in the House by Representative White (Democrat), Idaho, which, if signed by 217 of the 432 members, would force consideration of his bill for a bimetallic 16-to-1 standard.

"There's a lot of silver sentiment in the House and I believe I'll get the necessary signatures," White said.

But at least one of the first signers remarked privately that "we haven't got a chance." And Speaker Byrns said openly that he was not worried over possibility that the attempt would prevail.

The Treasury now offers 77.57 cents an ounce for domestic silver against the statutory gold price of $35. Silverites contend the disparity between the two is harmful to international trade because it reduces purchasing power of silver nations.

Blocs in both the House and Senate are urging the Treasury to raise its 77.57 cents an ounce price. Yesterday, however, while the United States offered that price the rest of the world offered only about 72 cents. Monetary students around the Treasury interpreted that as indicating there would be no immediate hike in the American price. Treasury officials, however, remained silent.

Since the Treasury instituted its silver purchase program, it has bought upward of 400,000,000 ounces of the metal. The price has about doubled in the last two years.

Senate Passes Patman Bonus, Inviting Veto

"Should there be, we ask in the name of the veterans that the veto be overcome by the two-thirds vote of the House and Senate * * *."

The Veterans of Foreign Wars, which indorsed the Patman bill from the time it was introduced in the House, voiced its "appreciation" to Congress.

"We have every reason to expect the President to sign the measure," said Commander in Chief James E. Van Zandt. "If he should veto the bill, we are confident it would be overridden by both houses * * *."

The engrossed Senate bill, following precisely the same language as the already approved House measure, will go directly to the President, probably after a two-day tie up. The delay was engineered by Senator Bennett Champ Clark, of Missouri, sponsor of the unsuccessful Vinson bill. He served notice of intention to file a motion to reconsider the final vote, which automatically holds up the measure for two days. Majority Leader Robinson, however, said Clark will not enter the motion.

Despite the defeat they took on the Harrison compromise, defeated earlier in the day by a 54 to 30 vote, Administration leaders were obviously satisfied with the outcome.

"In my opinion, this action kills all hope of any bonus this session," said Senator Pat Harrison, of Mississippi, chairman of the Senate Finance Committee.

Confident of Veto.

"I haven't a doubt in the world the President will veto this bill. When he does, the Senate will sustain his veto. We have at least 35 votes to check any attempt to override him."

Figures compiled by the Patman bill followers show that the District of Columbia has 28,182 veterans holding certificates with a face value of $27,133,967, and on which there would be payable, under the Patman bill, a total of $16,278,716.

A highly complicated parliamentary situation required four separate roll calls of the Senate to dispose of the three pending bonus plans, but the Senate was in no mood to filibuster or indulge its penchant for deliberation. With machine-like precision they sped through the balloting in a record-breaking three hours.

The first roll call came on a motion to substitute the noninflationary but full-cash payment Vinson bill for the Harrison compromise. Patman and Vinson forces joined in support of the motion, piling up a 54-to-30 vote, and effectively killing of the compromise.

But on the next ballot, a direct vote on the merits of the Vinson bill, the two factions split, and the Patman army carried the day. The Vinson bill was defeated 52 to 35. This was tantamount to approval of the Patman plan, the only one of the three measures left before the Senate.

Unwilling to accept defeat, Senator Clark attempted a shrewd parliamentary maneuver. He changed his vote from "aye" to "no," so as to be in position to ask reconsideration of the ballot. But the Patman backers anticipated the strategy and went it one better. Senator Thomas himself moved for reconsideration of the vote, and Huey Long promptly moved to table it. Clark demanded a roll call, but the reconsideration motion was tabled, 48 to 37.

The final motion came on routine passage of the completed bill. Administration leaders, who had voted previously for the Patman plan in promotion of a veto, here switched their ballots to "no," but their strength was ineffectual. The bill was passed, 55 to 33, four votes short of what the bill's sponsors will need if they attempt to pass it over a veto.

Throughout the day, pro-Patman telegrams inspired by Sunday's radio address by Father Charles E. Coughlin, of Detroit, continued to flood the Senate, bringing the total received near the 100,000 mark. Senator Clark, alone, said he received 2,200 of what he termed "propaganda wires."

Although leaders discounted the Coughlin and Long influence with a contemptuous gesture, Huey was everywhere during the Senate debate, swaggering between Republican and Democratic sides of the aisle after the manner of his Louisiana Legislature dramatics.

Huey Accused on Roll Call.

With a wave of his hand, he disparaged the leadership's advice that Senator McAdoo's sinking fund amendment was irregular, because it assumed Senate tax functions, possessed only by the House. To forestall a controversy, McAdoo withdrew the amendment.

Before the Patman vote, Huey had motioned McAdoo to sit down, when the former Treasury secretary first proposed his amendment. "That will come later," whispered Huey. McAdoo sat down.

Again, when the Senate was voting to table a reconsideration motion, a voice that sounded like Long's answered "yes" as Senator Burton K. Wheeler's name was called.

Senator Clark bounded to his feet with a point of order.

"The Senator from Louisiana voted for the Senator from Montana, who is not on the floor," said the Missourian.

"Here he is, right here," responded Huey. Wheeler was conversing with another Senator two seats from the Louisianan.

Clark apologized, but added:

"I distinctly heard the voice of the Senator from Louisiana."

All day there was not even standing room in the galleries, with long lines extending to the doors and down the corridors. Intermittent applause and laughter forced Vice President Garner repeatedly to admonish spectators against demonstrations.

It is a maxim in the Senate that speeches seldom change votes, but some observers believe the address of Senator McAdoo for the Patman bill was one of the exceptions. Senators who usually shun the floor during debate listened attentively, or interrogated the wartime Treasury Secretary.

McAdoo Cites "Mistakes."

McAdoo said he wanted to set at rest what he called the "mistaken belief" that Treasury notes or so-called "greenbacks," authorized under the Patman bill, would bring inflationary injury to the credit of the country. Such a plan, he continued, was superior to paying out billions in interest on bonds.

"It would affect the credit just about as much as if I took a spadeful of sand and threw it into the sea, expecting it to influence the ocean," he said.

"This Administration has of necessity been one of experiments, each attempting to blaze new trails. Here is the place we can blaze a trail without endangering credit and without bringing any of the evil consequences associated with inflation."

Questioned on Inflation.

Questioned by Senator Arthur H. Vandenberg (Republican), Michigan, McAdoo admitted the process could not be continued indefinitely, but said he could draw no line where sound financing stops and inflation begins.

"Then why didn't you issue Treasury notes when you were Secretary?" pressed Senator Josiah W. Bailey (Democrat), North Carolina.

"Because it wasn't necessary," McAdo insisted.

McAdoo's sinking fund amendment to the Patman bill was challenged by Senator Robinson, who said it made the bill a revenue measure, and by Senator Alben W. Barkley, of Kentucky, who said it conflicted with Patman bill provisions, authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to withdraw national bank notes and Federal Reserve notes from circulation whenever commodity prices reached the average for 1921 to 1929.

Would Bring Full Pay.

But the argument was cut short when McAdoo withdrew his amendment.

Should the Patman bill become law, every veteran would be paid at once the full amount of his remaining equity in his bonus, through the new currency issue. On an average $1,000 certificate, the veteran who had borrowed up to 50 per cent would receive about $487, and the veteran who had not borrowed at all, $1,000. All interest on loans, from October, 1931, on, amounting to about $182,132,302, would be suspended. Under the present law, certificates would not reach maturity until 1945.

Veterans' Administration experts estimate the maturity value of outstanding certificates at $3,479,802,408, against which about $1,718,334,944 in liens is outstanding. At present there is $1,460,000,000 in the administration's adjusted service certificate fund, requiring additional appropriation of about $2,201,934,710 to make full payment under the Patman bill.

Senators Vote Tests for 400 'Rider' Victims

Action Also Assures Pay Since December for 1,300 Treasury Aids.

Just a week before some 400 Treasury employes will be dropped unless they previously pass a civil service examinatoin, the Senate yesterday belatedly adopted a conference report on the Treasury-Post-office appropriations bill remedying in part the ravages of the McKellar "patronage rider."

The report was adopted without debate upon motion of Chairman Carter Glpass of the Senate Appropriations Committee.

The Civil Service Commission examination required by the amendment on next Monday providing the President signs the bill in the meantime. The results will have to be announced before the following Wednesday if the men involved are to be retained.

Some 1,300 Treasury employes who have been working without pay since last December 1 will collect more than $1,000,000 in back salaries after the bill is signed. The total appropriation, which covers salaries up to July 1, is $1,385,000.

The examination to be given for the employes whose civil service status is not acceptable to the Senate will be noncompetitive and consequently not so difficult as the test which so many of the Alcohol Tax Unit investigators failed last fall.

Employes who are required to take the examination are those whose service was not continuous and the purpose of examination will be to determine whether they are qualified to continue the work they now are doing.

The American Federation of Government Employes, as well as the National Federation of Federal eEmployes, was active in bringing about a virtual repeal of the McKellar proviso.

E. Claude Babcock, president of the A. F. G. E., waged a vigorous fight on the legislation on the ground that it undermined the merit system in Government service by requiring a second civil service test of employes who had obtained their positions by passing the usual entrance examinations.

WASHINGTON'S FASTEST GROWING NEWSPAPER

2 Reach Finals In Spelling Bee At Waynesboro

Von Frank, Miss Gamble Victors in Woodrow Wilson School.

George von Frank and Betty Gamble will represent Woodrow Wilson High School, Waynesboro, in the area finals of the national bee in Washington, May 18. Because of its size, the Waynesboro public school system, is considered on the same basis as counties, and will send its champions directly into the area finals, sponsored by The Washington Post.

Details of matches being held the earlier part of this week have been announced. On Friday, four counties in Virginia and three in Maryland will hold their contests.

The Arlington match will be held Friday at 7:30 p. m. in Washington-Lee High School. The pronouncer will be Mr. Howard Whitfield, a director of the Washington Community Players and the Bartfield Players. Mr. Whitfield has acted with the Children's Theater of New York and done radio work on Station WJSV. Other officials and contestants in this match have been announced.

Fauquier Match Friday.

Fauquier County will hold its contest also on Friday at 3:30 p. m. in the Warrenton High School. W. H. Thomas, superintendent of schools, will be honorary chairman, and the match will be in charge of Walter Lacey of The Post. Judges and pronouncer are still to be announced.

The Orange County match will be held Friday at 7:45 p. m. in the high school auditorium at Orange. D. N. Davidson, superintendent of schools, will preside, and the judges will be Mrs. G. R. Elliott, Orange; Mrs. W. B. Baughan, Gordonsville, and Mrs. B. H. Hudson, Unionville.

The remaining Virginia match on Friday will be for Page County spellers at 3:30 p. m. in the school at Luray. Officials will be announced later.

In Maryland, Calvert County has 100 per cent enrollment of schools eligible. The best spellers will compete for county honors at Prince Frederick School Friday at 3:30 p. m. This contest is in charge of Miss E. Virginia Dorsey, of the Prince Frederick School.

Montgomery Finals.

One of the largest matches in the territory will be held the same day at 2 p. m. in the Montgomery County High School at Rockville. School champions will take part in this contest, which is in charge of Mrs. Frances Holmead, of Montgomery High. George W. Davis, of Silver Spring, a member of the county school board, will be a judge, and acceptances from other officials invited are being awaited.

Anne Arundel County also will hold its match on Friday, at 7:30 p. m., in Linthicum Heights School. Mrs. Marguerite Hobbs is in charge of arrangements. Six spellers from each school enrolled will take part in this match.

Schools enrolled yesterday are:

Broomes Island, entered by Miss M. Grace Dorsey, and Wallville, entered by Miss Mary Y. Hardesty, both in Calvert County.

School Winners Named.

School winners, all of whom will receive certificates from The Post later this month, announced yesterday are:

Montgomery County High School, Rockville: Claude West, Annabelle Davis, Virginia Moriarity and Betty De Lashmutt; Burtonsville, Margaret Athey and Vincent Cooke.

Teachers or principals in each of these schools have been informed of the details of the county matches in which the pupils will take part. Miss Nellie Ashton, of the Madison School, writes: "The match seems to be arousing a great deal of interest, and I think it will be a great event for the youngsters as well as a great benefit."

Babs Poses, Serves Highballs, Waves New Diamond on Finger

Reporters Blink as Princess Mdivani Flashes Three-Quarter Inch Ring; She Is Silent on That and All Other Subjects.

By the United Press.

Reno, Nev., May 7.—Princess Barbara Hutton Mdivani, the world's richest about-to-be-divorced woman, held "court" today, but for the "subjects" the reception was most unsatisfactory.

The princess, who is to divorce Prince Alexis Mdivani here next Monday after charging him with cruelty, sat in regal pomp before 14 newspaper reporters and photographers.

Whether the diamond was an engagement ring from Count Kurt Haugwitz of Denmark, now en route to the United States ostensibly to marry her, or from Alexis, Barbara didn't explain. There was a great deal of silence, since no interviewing was permitted.

Poses for Pictures.

The occasion was the formal posing from news and news reel photographers. The princess walked down the steps of her home, then scurried back to the protection of a sun porch. Two cameramen persuaded her to make another entrance. More pictures were taken.

Then, Barbara balked. She didn't want any more photographs.

While the photographers sat hopefully awaiting her possbile return, Barbara sent her attorney, George Thatcher, out to inquire if they would "come in and chat."

They did. Once inside Barbara sat on a gold divan in the high-ceilinged front room of Thatcher's residence.

"Here's the press," Thatcher introduced her visitors. Barbara smiled politely. The photographers hung back shyly. "Come over and sit with me," she invited two of the group. She patted smooth places for them to sit. A deafening silence ensued.

She Can Say No.

"Can she talk?" inquired a reporter. Barbara chuckled.

"Certainly, she can talk," snapped Thatcher, "but no interviews and no questions."

"You mean you'll answer 'no' to all questions?" the Woolworth five-and-ten-cent store heiress was asked. She nodded in assent.

More silence.

"We drove all night to get here," was the nervous comment of a San Francisco photographer.

"You did?" inquired Barbara politely. "I sympathize for you."

The group smiled.

More silence.

"It's the toughest thing in the world for a bunch of newspaper boys to sit and not be able to interview you," laughed Thatcher, again breaking the silence.

Well, They Got a Drink.

"Oh, let him; it won't make any difference."

With that the "boys" downed Scotch highballs, in which Barbara had been toasted with "good luck," thanked her and filed stiffly from the room.

Court was over.

Gassaway Rides Long, Coughlin In N. Y. Round

By the United Press.

New York, May 7.—P. L. (Cowboy) Gassaway, Oklahoma sagebrush gift to Congress, invaded New York today in boots and 10-gallon hat. He left his spurs at home, but didn't need them to rip the political hides of Senator Huey Long and Father Charles E. Coughlin.

Old-fashioned oratory, delivered at a luncheon of the Motion Picture Club on Broadway, was his weapon. In the best Western tradition, he wore a Daniel Webster collar, a black string tie and a Prince Albert coat. His one concession (perhaps an unfluence of his first name, Percy) was to wear his pants over the decorated tops of his high-heeled boots, instead of tucking them in, range fashion.

He had intended to be polite in his speech on "The United States Today" and was until someone shouted "Call names." Promptly, he obliged.

Huey, "Monstrosity."

"All right, then, Huey Long," Gassaway shouted, identifying "the greatest monstrosity of modern times, the man who appeals to the ignorant, illiterate people and promises them something for nothing.

"I have no patience with these fellows who go around the country with useless, idiotic plans they know will never work. There is a living for everyone in this land," the rancher-lawyer-judge said.

"Here comes Father Coughlin in the cloth," he continued. "I say to Father Coughlin, if he's going to continue to sprinkle holy water and take confessions, what the hell do you know about money?"

Santa Claus a Suicide.

Shaking a mane of graying, curly hair from his high forehead and swinging a powerful arm for emphasis, Gassaway returned to the "outrageous kingfish:"

"I classify such a man as the same man who will promise his kids all year long that Santa Claus will come on Christmas eve and then when the night comes, goes into the yard and fires his gun and tells his kids that Santa Claus has committed suicide."

The Oklahoman, who once challenged Long to a pistol duel, said the Louisiana dictator's mail had dropped off 60 per cent.

"Huey has built his political house on sand. He is going to have a hell of a time getting elected to anything next time," predicted Gassaway.

Jesse Will Run For Reelection As Treasurer

Candidacy Is Announced by Arlington County Official.

ARLINGTON COUNTY BUREAU OF THE POST.
Tel. Clar. 509. Clarendon, Va.

Charles T. Jesse, resident of Arlington County for 25 years, has announced his candidacy for reelection as county treasurer subject to the Democratic primary, August 6.

Mr. Jesse was appointed by Judge W. T. McCarthy, February 26, 1932, to fill the unexpired term of E. Wade Ball.

Mr. Jesse, in announcing his candidacy, says:

"Since my appointment in 1932 I have endeavored to administer the duties of this office in efficient manner and if elected will continue to do so.

In this connection Mr. Jesse referred to the last report of T. Coleman Andrews & Co., of Richmond, accountants for the auditor of public accounts, to the county board, which reads:

"We are pleased to state that we found the accounts and records of the county unusually well kept during this year. Full information as to receipts and disbursements was available in the treasurer's office; satisfactory controls over revenues and expenditures were maintained in the auditor's office; and the accounting and financial records of the county generally were in an exceptionally good order. Much credit is due the auditor and the treasurer, we think, for the excellent order which they have brought out of the confusion which existed when they assumed their respective offices and for the very business-like manner in which they are discharging the duties of their offices."

Final public hearing prior to the adoption of the plumbing code for the county by the county board will be held at the courthouse tonight by the plumbing commission.

Walker Told To Explain Tax Delinquencies

Montgomery Treasurer Directed to Shed Light on $400,000 Item.

J. Forest Walker, treasurer of Montgomery County, yesterday was directed to explain uncollected taxes in his office before May 16, at a meeting of the Montgomery County Commissioners.

A special audit ordered by the commissioners revealed that uncollected taxes of approximately $400,000 remain on the treasurer's books. Mr. Walker declared this would be accounted for by insolvencies and other allowable items.

The action followed the announcement that Walker had obtained surety bond in the amount of $50.000 to cover county deposits. Yesterday was the last day on which he would be able to qualify as treasurer. Had he been unable to obtain surety bond the office of treasurer would have been declared open and a new treasurer appointed by the commissioners, who are controlled by the Fusion Party. Walker is a Democrat.

Democrats Hurl Charges.

Democratic leaders declared the action of the commissioners in throwing doubt on the standing of the treasurer's books was intended to debar him from obtaining bond to permit them to name a Fusion Party member to the post. This was denied by Fusionists.

The report of the special audit is to be made public May 16, the county commissioners announced.

So far Walker has filed insolvencies for 1931 and still has several years to present for credit. Insolvencies are deducted from the amount charged against the treasurer.

Chief of Police J. William Garrett presented plans for a safety campaign to reduce traffic accidents. He said the American Automobile Association has pledged cooperation.

Letters will be sent to every civic body urging cooperation and safety films will be exhibited in theaters. Stickers will be provided for automobiles and it is planned to ask street cars and buses to carry placards. Radio stations have been asked to join in the campaign, which was approved by the commissioners.

Upon motion of Commissioner Richard H. Lansdale, it was voted to ask Col. Harry C. Jones, State employment commissioner, to hold civil service examinations for applicants for posts with the county police force.

A hearing is to be held tonight at 8 o'clock on proposed changes in the zoning ordinance to permit use of property in residential areas for theaters at the discretion of the commissioners. The hearing will be held in the Rockville Courthouse.

The commissioners were notified by the Bureau of Public Roads that a letter written to President Roosevelt by the commissioners asking his co-operation in early elimination of the Rockville grade crossing, where 14 Williamsport school children were killed last month, had been turned over to the bureau.

The letter said individual projects must be submitted by the State roads commission, and that this so far has not been done. When a request from the State roads commission is received it will be given sympathetic attention, the letter declared.

Martinsville, Va., May 7.—Two building permits have been issued here this month, to bring the city's new construction program well toward the $150,000 mark for 1935. Permit was issued Saturday to R. S. Brown for the erection of a theater building on Church street, to cost between $12,000 and $15,000. The investment in land, building and equipment will total nearly $50,000.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Charles Town, May 7.—The postoffice at Ranson was broken into last night and ransacked. Postmaster George E. Milk Markets From Test Tubes

Milkmen do not live by milk alone.
They have learned that the market will not take all the milk they have agreed to buy from the dairy farmers.
Cows are not fitted for part time jobs.
The farmer must be in position to sell the whole output of his herd.
The milkman can only be sure of an adequate supply for the elastic demand by contracting for all of the farmer's milk.
He calls upon the chemist to find products which can be made from the excess of fluid milk.
The corporate milkman is big enough to provide his own laboratory.
New products, and new uses for established products are its goals.
One national company spent $508,000 on this kind of research in five years, and in the same period another spent $150,000 on cheese development alone.
The corporate milkman knows that his marketing possibilities are first seen in the chemist's test tubes.
Condensed and evaporated milk, milk powder, cheese, casein, and ice cream have all majored in science.

The Teeth In The Law.

One "big" man and a dozen "little" ones have been found, guilty of conspiracy to violate the gambling laws of the District. Sam Beard faces a maximum sentence of twelve years in jail; his fellow defendants are liable to proportional punishments. The verdict, if sustained on the inevitable appeal, will be both a practical demonstration of the power of aroused public opinion and a refutation of the argument that new legislation is the sole cure for old evils.

According to the prosecution's allegations, Beard had been pursuing his career as a gambler for a long time, and certainly the fact that various "big shots" have gone relatively undisturbed was common knowledge. According to the contentions of some, nothing could be accomplished against such activities until there was a new law with new teeth in it. Yet the old law was not changed—and Beard was convicted, at least partly because the District attorney's office has put on steam.

There is no mystery about this event, other than the eternal riddle of the popular conscience. There is no doubt that the existing anti-gambling statute can be improved. But if certain forms of gambling were rampant in Washington, it was partly because enough Washingtonians—in and out of authority—were not sufficiently desirous of their eradication. And if certain other forms continue to flourish, it will be for the same reason.

That the present law may be much more effective than it has been, the Beard case has proved. Only a relatively small percentage of law enforcement depends upon the framing of the statute; everything else depends upon the enforcers—and the measure of their energy is frequently the measure of the energy of the public, now happily aroused in this particular local problem.

Local Relief.

Reduction of the relief allowance to the District from the FERA seems to have influenced Commissioner Allen to issue a warning to "chiselers." Apparently he hopes to reduce the total outlay for sustenance of the unemployed by eliminating unworthy recipients from the relief rolls. The Commissioner might properly be asked why this has not been done long ago.

Reports that some individuals, especially domestic servants, are leaving their jobs to go on the relief rolls have long been current in Washington. Officials have tried to discourage such practices, but the admission by Commissioner Allen that "chiselers" are still obtaining relief indicates that much is yet to be done along this line. It is doubtful whether the worthy indigent can be separated from the merely indolent dole seeker until a more efficient method of applying the work test has been put into operation.

The number of chiselers can not be accurately estimated. Undoubtedly it is relatively small when compared with the total number obtaining relief. But even a few is enough to demoralize the whole relief system. If the smaller allowance from the FERA stimulates the local relief administrators to establish closer connections with the District employment center, so that able-bodied persons who are not inclined to work may be denied public charity, it may be a blessing in disguise.

Policies For Politics.

Without benefit of the flashlight fanfare that usually accompanies sessions of women's organizations, the biennial meeting of the general council of the National League of Women Voters yesterday began a four-day discussion in this city.

Keeping closely in mind its creed "to promote the responsible participation of women in government," the League is now concentrating on developing the campaign against the spoils system. Its plans for educating the public to the necessity of trained personnel in government are going forward in an efficient, thoroughly business-like manner. One-day "personnel" schools, thoughtfully prepared handbooks and intelligent radio broadcasts are a refreshing departure from the emotional chiffon propaganda which is all too prevalent today in patriotic feminine societies.

The League of Women Voters embodies a new and constructive type of "feminism," which has nothing to do with crusades, banners, badges or soap-box methods. Demonstrative politics are scorned by its members in favor of educational policies. These, then, are women concerned with the business of good government, fully cognizant of the added complications of the New Deal, doing more than their part to achieve a responsible foreign policy. Pink teas and the Red menace alike fail to divert them from the business at hand.

This afternoon will find the forum engaged in a discussion of the question, "Can Fifty Million People Have Their Minds Changed About Patronage?" Whether they can or not remains to be seen. But as long as the League continues to function in its present level-headed, sensible and progressive way, it may be assured that at least fifty million people will be glad to hear what its membership thinks upon the subject.

Amendments Are In Order.

Varying opinions are being expressed as to the effect the Supreme Court's decision in the railroad pensions case will have upon the social security legislation now before Congress. But there is no doubt anywhere that the court, by the slender majority of one vote, has rendered a very significant opinion.

The court did not merely declare the railroad retirement act unconstitutional. As Chief Justice Hughes pointed out in his dissenting opinion, it denied "to Congress the power to pass any compulsory pension act for railroad employes." The Government contended that the act creating a pensions system in the railroad industry represented a legitimate exercise of the congressional power to regulate interstate commerce. But a bare majority of the court found that the real purpose of the act was to increase the contentment of employes and give them a greater sense of security. It refused to accept the view that pensions "dictated by statute and not voluntarily extended by the employer" promote either efficiency or safety.

"We feel bound to hold," the majority opinion says, "that a pension plan thus imposed is in no proper sense a regulation of the activity of interstate transportation."

The minority opinion, on the contrary, expands from the morally compelling assumption that "industry should take care of its human wastage." The expression of that conviction in law is regulation. But this view, in the opinion of the majority, fails "to distinguish constitutional power from social desirability."

Members of the court concurring in Justice Roberts' emphatic opinion refused to concern themselves with humanitarian considerations. "Our duty, like that of the court below," the opinion said, "is fairly to construe the powers of Congress, and to ascertain whether or not the enactment falls within them, uninfluenced by predilection for or against the policy disclosed in the legislation . . . Though we should think the measure embodies a valuable social plan and be in entire sympathy with its purpose and intended results, if the provisions go beyond the boundaries of constitutional power, we must so declare."

Congress has put an unusually heavy burden upon the Supreme Court in recent years. In a period of sweeping social and economic changes it has passed a series of far-reaching measures with inadequate advance consideration as to their constitutionality. Apparently the Supreme Court has been expected to uphold these momentous enactments on grounds of expediency, if no valid legal basis could be found. Justices of the court can not properly be criticized for taking a very different view of the huge responsibility entrusted to them.

The attitude of the court has, of course, no bearing whatsoever upon the desirability of social security legislation. If Congress decides that the Federal Government should exercise larger powers over human welfare, it can initiate constitutional amendments extending its present limited authority. The executive council of the A. F. of L. is doing a constructive service in proposing that course at this juncture. For the enactment of legislation outside of existing constitutional powers is unfair both to the Supreme Court and to the people. Under these circumstances the court must take responsibility for either upsetting initiated policies or rendering expedient decisions. And the public is denied the opportunity for full discussion which ought to attend every modification of the fundamental law.

Of course, it would be dangerous for the court to adopt a narrow, legalistic attitude toward the Constitution, as many feel it has done in this case. The flexibility of that document is probably the chief reason why it has not passed into oblivion along with other national charters that have been cast in more rigid phraseology. But there is an indefinable limit beyond which judicial expansion of the fundamental law can not be carried under our Federal system. If Congress were left free to enact legislation in the social security field, without any regard for constitutional limitations, much of the power reserved to the States could rapidly be obliterated.

It may be that changes of this sort are essential to cope with the social-economic problems of the day. But if so, they should be hammered out on the anvil of public expression set up by the Constitution itself. Progressive movements which have the support of the people can be legalized in this way without undue delay, as repeal of the eighteenth amendment proved. At the same time the basic principles which have guided the Nation for a century and a half, with at least reasonable success, can be protected against temporary thoughtlessness on the part of Congress.

Understatement.

Now that the Senate has approved and sent to the House a bill to reimburse California for financial aid "to the Federal Government during the War Between the States," attention turns toward what might have more safely been an identical bill from an Eastern Commonwealth.

Senator Copeland has proposed an act for repayment to New York of $764,143 which the Empire State expended in "enrolling, subsisting, clothing, supplying, arming, equipping and paying troops" who, also, in the words of an old and ribald Harvard song, "fit with Gen'ral Grant."

Considering California's action, it may be beside the issue to ask what a sovereign State does when it "subsists" somebody, and to wonder whether, from the Senator's brief catalogue of New York's gifts to those troops, much has not been omitted. But it really does seem that Mr. Copeland lacks tact—to use no more severe expression—in the term which he applies to what a diplomatic statesman once called "the late unpleasantness."

For the well-meaning Senator says—in his proposed act—that the soldiers were "employed in aiding to suppress the insurrection against the United States in 1861-65."

Hasn't our unhappy country enough present troubles without deliberately provoking more? When the trifling matters of secession and slavery were finally determined at Appomattox, there began a second Kriegsspiel, scarcely less sanguine than its predecessor, over the proper name for that great contest. The South called it "The War Between the States;" the North called it "The War of the Rebellion." But not even William Lloyd Garrison would have called it an insurrection!

The British Crown.

Behind any voluntary outpouring of human sentiment, underlying the emotional manifestations in which the race delights, there is generally some sound practical instinct giving the display significance. So it is worth while to inquire what fundamental meaning is to be sought in the great jubilee demonstrations for the King and Queen of Great Britain.

In the twenty-fifth anniversary of the accession of a ruler who has proved himself a modest and unaffected gentleman there was of course much justification for this outpouring of loyalist expression. But if the king were merely what the king is, it may be doubted whether the demonstrations—in London, over Great Britain, and throughout the empire—would have had as much spontaneity and intensity. His subjects on Monday were honoring King George as a man. But even more they were honoring the crown as a successful political institution.

The strength which accrues to British government from having at its head one who represents the people as a whole, and not any particular party, class or policy, can not be questioned. It is a strength which republics lack, and which has helped to bring dictatorships in those countries which have launched republics without first building strong traditions of self-government.

Through centuries of evolution, and by learning from the lessons of history, the British crown has been established as one of the most interesting political instruments of all time. It does not eliminate the advantages of representative government, as does the dictatorship. It merely balances and renders more secure the parliamentary effort to make the state responsive to the popular will. On the other hand the crown affords a continuity of direction which the dictatorship possesses only temporarily and the republic even less securely. It is a political gyroscope ever operating to keep the ship of state on even keel.

The crown has proved itself a most valuable instrument for the orderly direction of national policy. Within the reign of King George V, for instance, it has fulfilled its functions with equal smoothness and helpfulness under Tory and Socialist governments. But if valuable for Britain herself it is invaluable as an imperial symbol. Today the crown and the crown alone provides the king-pin which holds as a stable structure that smoothly functioning League of Nations known as the British Commonwealth.

To the institution of the crown, moreover, is largely due the ability of the English to govern themselves without any elaborate system of checks and balances, without a written constitution, and with a flexibility and unruffled adaptation to changing conditions which have stood the nation in good stead during the tempests of recent years.

As a man, King George has shown himself an admirable figure. But his great achievement has been the negative one of merging his personality in a decorative yet important office. Paradoxically, the king is great in just such measure as he can subordinate himself to the crown. That symbol should do more to bind than to enlarge the personality of him who wears it temporarily. And it is primarily because King George has shown himself so fully aware of this duty of self-renunciation that his people do him such honor, as a worthy guardian of an essential part of their political machinery.

Dangerous Taxes.

From the Detroit News.

Increasing chain store taxes will have one of two results.

Either it will compel the chain stores to increase prices, and the increased taxes will be passed on to the public;

Or it will put them out of business, and the single stores, freed from competition, will be able to raise prices, the public paying the bill.

The sensible arrangement, it seems to us, would be to keep the chain stores and the single stores in competition, rather than tax the former out of business or allow them to crush the private stores. The use of the taxing arm to kill one man's business and boost another man's at the public expense is a dangerous exercise of power.

Death Gives The Signal.

During the temporary absence of Mr. Elderman, The Post's cartoonist, a symposium of editorial reaction to current national and foreign affairs will be published from day to day in this space. The reprinted drawings will not necessarily represent our own viewpoint, but are selected as reflections of considered opinions on the passing scene. The editors of The Post wish to make full acknowledgment of the courtesy of their contemporaries in granting permission for this procedure.

Letters To The Editor

The Post welcomes letters from its readers. All communications must be signed with the writer's name and address. Upon publication initials or pen names will be used if requested. Letters are subject to condensation, and in no case should they exceed 250 words.

So Do We.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: It's a long cry from the Potomac to the desert sage brush—but we're human out here—and we vote.

We people of the West love action—but not the kind that destroys confidence; not the uncertainty of what's going to happen next; not blind reckless extravagant expenditure of billions and billions of dollars for anything and everything anybody suggests (except for veterans, of course)—and we are in a very receptive mood to look over the qualifications of anybody who chooses to enter the Presidential race next year.

We want a President who will come out and say the night before election in 1936: "Send to Congress the men you think will best represent all America! I don't care whether they are Republicans, Democrats, Progressives, Liberals, or what—just so they are true Americans at heart and you have faith in their ability and integrity."

We want a President who will say: "If any nation wants to talk about secret treaties, war, or foreign intervention—let's take it up openly with our high school and college boys—our young men who still are under 21 and have no voice in our Government as yet—they, and not our diplomats, nor Congress—are the ones who will do the fighting."

We want a President who will stabilize something, somewhere, permanently.

We want a President who will take all postmasterships out of politics. We are sick and tired, disgusted and nauseated with the present system of building up political machinery at the expense of efficiency, ability, respect and decency.

Finally, we want a President who possesses the foresight of Washington, the wisdom of Jefferson, the humanitarianism of Lincoln, the idealism of Wilson and the courage of Teddy Roosevelt.

Miss Addams' "Propaganda."

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I am unable to find listed in the telephone directory either the National Patriotic Council or the name of its "executive secretary," as signed to a statement to The Post on May 2, denouncing the "subversive influence" of Miss Jane Addams, and so I am left puzzled about the source of this remarkable communication—or was it perhaps intended as a joke?

In attacking Miss Addams' life work in behalf of world peace the statement calls upon "all red-blooded Americans to combat those un-American activities and the insidious propaganda—(for peace)—that would destroy our God-given institutions," etc. Agents of munitions interests and their paid lobbyists often go to extremes in the use of language in their efforts to stir up trade, but I doubt if even a professional big Army and Navy lobbyist would refer to the organized butchery and savagery of war as a God-given institution.

I was grateful to be one of the multitude in McPherson Square yesterday afternoon who was privileged to hear the "insidious" propaganda against war broadcast across the world and proclaimed by the Ambassadors of England, Russia and Japan, among others, by Lord Cecil and Arthur Henderson speaking from London, by Senator Paul Boncour from France and by the fine intelligent wife of our own Secretary of the Interior here. This same "insidious propaganda" is now being indorsed and promulgated with enthusiasm by countless millions of thinking, responsible persons the world around, whose numbers are steadily and rapidly increasing, so Miss Addams by no means stands alone.

Still, She Had Done Wrong.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Recently as I came out of a local store I was much interested in watching what is coming to be a tragedy in our Nation.

A lady had stopped her car across the street and leaving the windows open, dashed into a store to meet an appointment. In about three minutes she returned to find that a policeman was tagging her car for violating parking regulations. She explained how she had been gone only a few minutes, and did not consider that such a limited time had been a violation of the parking regulations.

The lady was pleading her innocence of willful violations in very humble language when I came near, and was much embarrassed that she did not have the $3 the officer said she would have to deposit. It was very evident that he was enjoying the occasion immensely. But when he noticed that I was copying down his number a large part of the thrill seemed to have left him, and he made as hurried an exit as he could, leaving the woman dumfounded as to what she should do. She had in no sense meant to place herself in the class called criminals.

Traffic regulations and traffic laws are a necessary part of our city life, but the way it is being administered is coming to be such a menace that it is time for the citizens to raise a cry of protest.

I own property in three States, and pay a large amount of taxes on the property, but I object to money that I am paying going to support an institution that is tending to create such a condition as the administration of our traffic laws is causing. E. B.

Civil Service Ideals.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: In your issue of May 2, a letter to the editor—"Democracy in Pop Corn"—is worthy of a reply if we knew which side of the question Charles J. Sullivan was taking. We can not tell whether he is in favor of allowing his friend from Athens, Calif., to continue his obstruction of traffic on one of the busiest corners in Washington or not. Mr. Sullivan might see if some good American could get a space on the other corner.

It is not the purpose of this letter to find fault with all your letters to the editor, for in The Post of April 30, Edwin Evans goes after the overworked and underpaid civil service employes in good style. I think that the men who conceived the idea of civil service were the same kind who conceived the idea of prohibition. They were moved by high ideals to better mankind, but when their ideas were put into the hands of a lot of parasites, then they became a fraud. We need a few more men like Mr. Evans to call the attention of the American people to the facts.

Spending—Then And Now.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: In reading a portion of Secretary Wallace's speech in Richmond on April 27, I noticed that he forecast a continuance of hard times for several years to come. Just think of it, spending billions of dollars of other people's money that we have borrowed, and hard times!

But if it is hard times with us when we have billions of dollars to spend extravagantly, what will it be when we have to pay it back with interest?

If Mr. Hoover had dipped a steam shovel in the U. S. Treasury and taken out billions of dollars and squandered it as this Administration has done, and called it relief, he would have been in the White House now. But rather than place on the backs of the American people a burden that can not be paid, he left the White House.

On Capital Punishment.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: It seems quite the usual thing for a correspondent desiring a letter published to preface his message by telling you how much better The Post is than it used to be. Perhaps, being abundantly assured on that point, you may now entertain suggestions as to reaching still higher ground.

One step upward would be the reprobation of capital punishment, and I believe a large share of your readers would applaud such a course. The recent hanging in Kentucky, which you set forth in its awful nakedness, is enough to make all decent, thoughtful people sick and disgusted.

"War Secrets."

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The statement issued by the President of the United States to Canada, for the advertised U. S. Army "war secrets," does not alter things, as the fact remains that there are "secrets" detrimental to Canada and British territories in North America, which is quite enough. KIM.

Cross-Words And Scripture.

One thing that is sending the Laodiceans to the Bible in these days is the cross-word puzzle. Name after name in the Scriptures is rich in vowels and there are dozens of four-letter names that have two vowels, like Amos and Ezra and Saul and Noah. When we consider the millions who work out cross-word puzzles and have to consult the Bible daily for key-words, it would not be strange if thousands thus gained a familiarity with the Book which they would not have troubled themselves to obtain otherwise.

It is a step in the right direction to learn to tell without looking that Genesis and Obadiah are in the Old Testament and not in the New; that Delilah did not crop Samson's locks herself but got a Philistine barber to do it. For many young people are woefully ignorant of the Bible even in its literary character. If the cross-word puzzle can rouse their curiosity to study it they may find that the names of the old Bible worthies have an importance and interest far beyond their adaptability to the devices of the puzzle-maker.

The Post Impressionist

Rolandless Oliver

Post Office, Wednesday.

AN odd world, this! The loyal subjects of George V very properly celebrate his twenty-fifth anniversary as a constitutional monarch. And the Governorship General of Canada is about to be assumed by the author of a book in praise of a dictator.

John Buchan is a charming gentleman: he once bought the Post-Impressionist a necktie. He is a charming author, and a prolific: among his 32 books are some of the best adventure stories of our day, all in excellent Stevensonian style, and a soldierly history of the World War. There is also a biography of Cromwell.

The popular idea of the great Protector is that he was a man of the people who championed their rights against a tyrannous monarch. Mr. Buchan quite consciously demonstrates—what students already knew—that Cromwell was by no means proletarian. Less consciously, Mr. Buchan demonstrates that, whatever dictatorial theories Charles I may have entertained, the practices of Oliver were a lot more dictatorial.

The rebellion against the Stuarts was not a rebellion of the people and by the people—nor was it unselfishly for the people. As Buchan well describes it, it was waged by the Puritans against the Cavaliers: by the Puritans who numbered not 5 per cent of the population.

And its leaders? The barons wrested Magna Charta from John at Runnymede. In 1776 George Washington and Thomas Jefferson were what their English enemies would have called country gentlemen. Mr. Buchan will give no credence to the old story about Cromwell having "Stuart blood in his veins," but does make it abundantly clear that he "was at least as well descended as the Cecils and the Churchills."

Moreover, his contemporary popularity is dubious. He owed his formal power to a franchise so limited that, in these days, it would not be considered for a moment as necessarily expressing the will of the nation. And as to his informal power—well, Charles attempted to arrest five members of Parliament; Oliver "treated the House of Commons"—so a New York Times reviewer puts it—"as Hitler treats the Reichstag."

Buchan shows Oliver a sportsman. He was "the best judge of a horse in England;" to improve the native stock, he imported Arab horses from Aleppo; he mounted his Ironsides superbly, loved deer-hunting and "never lost his zest" for hawking.

He was no mere politician playing with war. As Von Hoenig has ranked "with any achievement of Moltke or Napoleon" that strategy which culminated in Worcester, so Buchan describes how Cromwell, with a foresight amounting to genius, "opened the door to the invader, and by a precise concentration at the right point made victory certain."

He possessed a soul for art. He proved "a painstaking chancellor of Oxford . . . saved the Raphael cartoons." Passionately fond of music, he had "two organs at Hampton Court."

And yet, though, in true Puritan fashion, his "sins brooded over him like birds of night," he never counted among his offenses such more than Robespierre massacres as that massacre at Drogheda:

"The heaviest slaying was around St. Peter's Church, where a thousand died. Some 80 took refuge in the steeple; Oliver ordered it to be burned, and those who escaped the flames perished by the sword . . . Refugees were driven out of two towers on the wall, the officers slain and the rest shipped to the Barbados. Every friar found in the place, save two, was knocked on the head."

Cromwell called it a "righteous judgment of God upon these barbarous wretches who have imbued their hands in so much innocent blood."

Milton was his intimate. Says the gentle poet Marvell: he had "wondrous sweetness of heart . . . his tenderness extended unto all."

* * *

What was he?

John Richard Green saw him as the sword of an oppressed legislature defying an oppressive king—yet Cromwell, too, defied and oppressed the legislature.

Carlyle saw him as a hero ruler—yet Cromwell himself feared that he was damned.

To Hallam and Hume, he was "the hypocrite, the vulgar usurper, the bandit of genius." To Scott, who romanticized him, he was something inhuman. To Clarendon, who fought him, he was "a brave bad man."

And to Canada's Governor General elect?

To John Buchan, Oliver in arms and statescraft is the forerunner of Pilsudski.

But Buchan's admiration is not for Cromwell in arms and statescraft—at least not for the murderous Cromwell and the oppressive Cromwell. Buchan's admiration is for Cromwell the Puritan. And, besides his other offices, Scotch John Buchan is Lord High Commissioner for the Church of Scotland.

The Real Casualty

THE fellow who really got hurt in yesterday's bonus debacle in the Senate was Mr. Wright Patman, a Congressman from Texas, who for several years has been the veterans' fair-haired boy and who has adorned their meetings all over the country. The chances are that he won't adorn their meetings any more.

When you realize what has been done to Wright, in fact, you feel shaky and uncertain of the future and become interested in the security legislation. Here was a fellow going along like wild-fire. There seemed no limit to how far he could go. Certainly he seemed assured of his present $10,000 a year job for many years to come. Then bang, out of the clear sky comes a bolt which makes his future very uncertain, indeed.

• • • •

What happened to Wright, of course, was that he got tied up with those city slickers, Huey Long, Elmer Thomas and Father Coughlin. Yesterday in the bonus voting they got mixed up in their own city slicking and left Wright holding the bag. When the veterans learn that although the Senate passed a bonus bill they are to get no bonus after all they will all in likelihood put their finger right on Wright. Because they have been told by the American Legion since the very beginning of the fight that just what happened yesterday would be the result.

Some observers thought Huey, Elmer and the Father were in the same boat with Wright. They were just as much responsible for the outcome as he. But the very strong impression is that while the result bewildered them they are not really interested in the bonus but in the advancement of their monetary theories. Huey and Elmer will undoubtedly keep the long distance telephone hot impressing upon the Father that when he takes the radio between now and the time the bill passed yesterday is vetoed and returned to the Hill that instead of shouting he scream. The Administration leaders are confident, however, that the veto of the Patman bill will be sustained, as yesterday's vote showed, and that the bonus is dead. And it probably is, in spite of anything the Father can do or say. It will certainly leave Wright in a pretty fix.

If there is any lesson to be drawn from it it is that one should be most careful of his associates. Wright was an upstanding fellow and the bonus racket had served him as a most reliable vehicle. As a vote-getter it can't be beat. John Rankin, of Mississippi, had a monopoly on it for awhile, but when he became bigger of stature, so to speak, when his interests broadened to the point of having designs on the leadership, he turned the veterans' vehicle over to Wright.

Then Wright got to running with Huey and Elmer and listening to their grandiose schemes and to Father Coughlin's radio talks. It was natural that he should want to advance, of course. Having observed how Rankin rose from championship of the veterans to the point of always announcing his candidacy in a leadership fight—even announcement of one's candidacy whether you get anywhere or not is a position to be attained—Wright was undoubtedly always looking for ways to pull himself up.

• • • •

The legion implored him not to press his bill. It was known that the forces behind it were inflationary forces and not those really concerned in the bonus. The situation in the Senate had cleared to the point of where it could be seen the Vinson bill could be passed over a veto and that the Patman inflationary bill could not.

If Wright was in the Senate yesterday he must have felt sick when he saw the enthusiasm with which the Administration forces jockeyed his bill to passage. They were not friends of the bill. He must also have seen how ruthless his buddies Elmer and Huey were. They had an opportunity after it became apparent what had been done to them to extricate themselves. You would think they would then, realizing their monetary cause was lost, have switched to the Vinson bill. But they didn't. They gave no thought to Wright and his predicament at all. The veterans are likely to tear him, politically, from limb to limb.

When it is all sifted down the underlying motive of Huey, Elmer and the Father must be to embarrass the President. They must want to be able to say he denied both the inflationists and the veterans. Wright will try to say this, too, but it is doubtful in his case if it will help. You see, the veterans' racket was about all he had.

Post Correspondent Evens Score With Torturer Of Boyhood Days

Special Correspondence of The Post.

New York.

THIS column today has the exquisite and long - deferred pleasure of paying a debt of spite. For more years than he cares to remember—at least a century, it seems—it has rankled in the bosom of your correspondent and is now about to be discharged. The spiritual catharsis, no doubt, will make a better man of him, a prouder father and a nobler citizen.

Years ago in the dim past, when S street was way uptown in Washington and "giddap!" floated from the buggies tooling past the Ebbitt House, your correspondent's mother sent him to a Sunday school picnic all dolled up in the following costume, to wit: One pair of black stockings (do not shudder yet); one pair of buckled patent leather shoes, one pair of knee pants made (you won't believe this) of black velvet, one velvet jacket, open in the front; one ruffled white khirt, one large, floppy red bow tie, and (oh Gawd, Miss Agnes!) one disgusting red silk sash infamously binding his middle.

This is not fiction drawn from the Dark Ages. It actually occurred. In fact, there was one other boy at the picnic decked out in approximately the same get-up. The two of us brooded miserably and apart, walked dejectedly away when we had stones thrown at us, bowed our heads in shame at the joint name of "Charley," which was then a term of reproach among nasty little girls, and were only comforted when we spilled liberal quantities of strawberry ice cream on our breeches. Ice cream doesn't do velvet a bit of good.

THE whole loathsome outfit was known as "The Little Lord Fauntleroy." Department stores were madly misled into offering it for sale and it looked terrible even on a store window dummy, let alone a human being. It was named after a repellant, flaxen-curled sissy in a book, which mothers cried over, by Frances Hodgson Burnett. Mrs. Burnett has now gone to her reward and we hope we know what it is. But the man responsible for that costume, the man who designed it and wished it on a world of rebellious young he-Americans, still lives. His name is Reggie Birch, he lives here in New York, and this week he passes into his eightieth year.

No man's sins have ever pursued him more relentlessly than those of Reginald Bathurst Birch. It is now 40 years or more, come man and boy, since he drew the fateful illustrations for "Little Lord Fauntleroy." Though he has made pictures for 108 other books and drawings innumerable for the magazines, "Little Lord Fauntleroy" still haunts him. It remains his magnum opus and his bete noir—a black velvet bete noir.

"Oh, yes, I know!" cries the gushing lady meeting Reggie for the first time, "You're the man who did 'Little Lord Fauntleroy!' Wasn't that about the time you were doing the stuff for "Little Lord Fauntleroy'?" asks his old friend and fellow artist, somewhat maliciously. "And now, Mr. Birch," implores the interviewer, "Let's sit right down and talk about 'Little Lord Fauntleroy'." "Gleeps to you!" says Reggie, who knows his modern slang. "Go jump in the lake!"

• • • •

REGGIE BIRCH belongs to the same club as your correspondent. (Hey, Bill, let's can this "your correspondent" stuff. What say? Okay by you?) Well, as I was saying, Reggie Birch belongs to the same club I do, the Players. He is a little birdlike man with a leonine head of white hair and an iron gray waxed mustache. He is erect as an arrow and always meticulously dressed. Indeed, he is rather by way of being a dandy.

When he has gathered with the right rabble and tossed a few down the hatch at the bar he can sing all the Latin words of "Gaudeamus Igitur," that grand medieval student song which he learned in his salad days at Munich. That was when he was a duelist "on the menzur" for the old Rhena-Palatins. He likes to recall, too, how, as a child, he and his grandfather, surgeon general of the British navy, would stand up after dinner and solemnly pledge, "The Queen, God bless her!" in good, crimson port. That would be Victoria, "the widdy of Windsor." My, my, how time flies! And Reggie's grandfather, by the way, was the well-remembered model for the distinguished looking old earl in "Little Lord Fauntleroy."

There you are—Little Lord Fauntleroy! Reggie Birch can't get away from it and neither can I, having worn the cursed badge of shame. "But it was an early crime," pleads Reggie plaintively. "Why can't they forgive me?"

• • • •

AND now for a revelation which will cause you to jump up and down in astonishment. Little Lord Fauntleroy himself still lives. No kidding.

All the bio's tell us that Mrs. Burnett had her son, Vivian, in mind when she wrote the book that launched 10,000,000 red sashes. Vivian Burnett is still up and around. He lives at Plandome, Long Island, and drops into the Dutch Treat Club at the St. Regis almost every week.

Of course Little Lord Fauntleroy doesn't wear velvet knee pants or a red sash. He hasn't got long yellow curls, either. He is bald headed and wears spectacles. Now and then he stands up and recites Lewis Carroll's "The Jabberwock" in German, to great applause.

Vivian looks so natural in an ordinary business suit with the usual long pants I never had the nerve to ask him if he himself ever actually wore one of those Fauntleroy uniforms. I didn't want to raise the subject.

THE AMERICAN MERCURY, thermometer to the pulses of our native boobery under Henry Mencken, is now registering at least a hundred degrees of heat and very little light under the confusion of an office strike. Since Mencken gave it up, the book has been published by Lawrence Spivak and edited by Paul Palmer, Sunday skipper of the late World. A week ago Palmer tried to fire his secretary, Edith Lustgarten, former secretary to Mencken. Publisher and editor were immediately confronted by the entire office force with instructions as to what wages were to be paid and how the magazine was to be run. On their part they "refuse to have their magazine managed by a shop committee, though they are willing to receive suggestions from such a committee; they do not feel that switchboard operators are qualified to read manuscripts."

This clears up a misconception your correspondent (back in harness again) has always had, though not especially in regard to the American Mercury. It has been his impression, founded entirely upon a careful perusal of the magazines, that all manuscripts were read exclusively by switchboard operators and then submitted to the final judgment of the janitor, assisted by an expert committee of charwomen. We thought the function of the editor was merely to send the rejection slip.

UP in Provincetown, Mass., home of the cod, the bean and the summer artist, they have a columnist who wanders around like a Pilgrim father, ringing a big bronze bell and announcing blessed events, anklings up the middle aisle, meltings and local phts. His name is Mr. Kubik and he is sort of square cut, at that. But he does his columning old style with a "Hark ye! Hark ye! Hark ye!"

Even columnists these days have their press agents and Mr. Kubik has his. They are both visiting New York this week to help open the Hobby Round-up. Mr. Kubik has a voice which is said to carry more than 2 miles along the Cape Cod shore against the breakers. He stood on the roof of the Hotel Commodore the other day, dressed a bit like Little Lord Fauntleroy (will you kindly keep King Charles' head out of this conversation, Mr. Dick?) and shouted at the Empire State Building hoping that heads would pop out of every window. Nary a head appeared.

More About Dickens

By

Wm. Lyon Phelps

THE immense success of the motion picutre, "David Copperfield," with "Great Expectations" and "Edwin Drood" both on the screen, leads me to hope that eventually we shall be able to see every one of Dickens' immortal stories.

• • • •

Meanwhile almost every day one hears some new anecdote about Dickens or reads some new bit of information. Dickens dominates the whole English-speaking world today, more than ever before.

• • • •

The Authors Club of London had a meeting last February, where Maj. Gordon Home said that a gardener, Mr. Wooley, now over 80, was "the last living link with the Dickens' household at Gad's Hill." As a boy he worked on the place, and while perched on top of a ladder, cutting a hedge, he saw Dickens in a secluded part of the garden, vigorously declaiming. He thought the novelist had "gone off his head," but he was merely preparing a speech. Dickens acted out everything.

At this same meeting the author Sidney Dark said "there was possibly no parallel of the manner in which Dickens lived in the hearts of his contemporaries. Dickens was of paramount importance because he had given articulate expression to the life of the simple man. This was something which philosophers failed to do."

• • • •

He went on to say that most writers who have sprung from the common crowd have been separated by their genius from the people of their youth, and thus have looked back from a superior (not snobbish) standpoint, in writing novels about the people with whom they used to associate. Mr. Dark thought this was a real difference between Dickens and a novelist so democratic as H. G. Wells. Mr. Wells writes about Kipps and other small folks from the standpoint of a "clear-headed philosopher," whereas Dickens "remained in the world in which he began," and we know that he would have been at home enjoying himself in the company of those lowly people.

• • • •

Mr. Dark also thought that the substitution of taxicabs for horse-drawn vehicles had not annihilated characters like Sam Weller. Many a taxi driver today might express himself like Sam Weller.

Finally, Mr. Dark made a significant remark about Dickens' influence as a social reformer. He laughed at "cruelty, hyprocrisy, and sin; he became the most successful social reformer who ever lived. These evils might withstand criticism, but they could not withstand ridicule."

Whatever differences there may be between Dickens and Wells, the latter has read Dickens all his life. When I said to Mr. Wells that I was interested in seeing that the Chancellor of the Exchequer in the House of Commons last year said that England had gone from Bleak House to Great Expectations, Mr. Wells smiled and replied, "But the Great Expectations were not realized."

No End of Books

"Royal London," Photographs Holding The Spirit Of The Jubilee; A Little Tale Of King George.

By Theodore Hall.

FIVE or six hundred years ago the Londoners were known among their country cousins for their invincible love of pageantry. The habit still persists, as might be expected in a town where habits are something quite beyond the comprehension of the cis-Atlantic world—on every night, at the same hour, for example, they've rung the curfew bell in London for 900 years!

Now that English delight in costume and play show and pageant is, when you come to think of it, one of the most curious things in the world. That a country with a budget, with economic advisers and a crack civil service list, with state-controlled radio and state-distributed electricity and a taste for constructing super dreadnaughts, should support such a corps as the Yeomen of the Guard is, to say the least, rather noticeable in a machine age. These "beef eaters," as they're traditionally called, have been wearing strictly Tudor costumes (embroidered tunics, fluffed crimped collars, knee breeches with rosettes, etc.) and carrying pikes ever since Henry VII instituted the corps seven years before Columbus discovered America. And what do they do? They take part in parades and every time there's a new Parliament they go down in the cellar of the House of Lords and look for another Guy Fawkes. They haven't found one in 330 years.

Then take the Life Guards and Royal Horse Guards—stanch and dignified fellows, wearing plumed helmets, breastplates, thigh boots and elbow-length gauntlets, carrying swords, and mounted on fine horses. In all the British army they stand first in precedence. They're the ones you see changing guard in Whitehall, and yet mightn't there be some point in letting them have a handy Webley revolver under their tunics? Or is it the same principle of innate authority by which the London bobby goes unarmed?

And then there's the household cavalry which guards the king when he goes out in the state coach. No car of Secret Service men, mind you, but pure and handsome pageantry. It is quite as if a Democratic President here, in honor of Jackson, should be followed by a company of Kentucky riflemen in leather jerkins and coon-skin caps.

• • • •

AND the pageantry works. The English (aside from the Communists) love it, and every American who ever saw it loves it too. Ask any returned tourist. And top and center and very essence of that quasi-mystical, indubitably practical adoration for ritual and color is the King. What surprised the British during his twenty-fifth jubilee this week was not the carping protest at the expense of the show—it was the fact, made plain from even the most strongly Labor boroughs, that they had provided not nearly enough pageantry. The 2,000-year-old City of London went wild with jubilation.

Well, if you're reading this you didn't see it. And perhaps you've never seen London, where they have traffic signs in the shadow of the 600-year-old building in which Sir Thomas Moore, Charles I and Warren Hastings were tried, and where the fog comes down so thick that omnibuses get lost and fire engines have to crawl along in the wake of a man carrying a torch.

Next best thing, then, is this elegant volume of 99 large photographs — "Royal London" (The Studio, $2). Edited by F. A. Mercer, and with a glimpse of London's history written by Douglas Goldring, its rotogravure reproductions take us from the King-Emperor on his charger to a London "Bobby" beside Nelson's Column and a glimpse of the Domesday Book. Here is the Coronation Chair with the "Stone of Scone" (on which the ancient kings of Scotland were crowned) beneath it—the guard mount at Buckingham Palace—the debutantes in their limousines on the Mall, waiting their chance to curtsey to the King and Queen (and the Cockney crowd beside them, exclaiming: "Coo, ain't she lurvely!"—a glimpse of the Royal Garden Party, which William Lyon Phelps told us of attending in '28—the "Eros" statue in Piccadilly Circus, about which Christopher Morley wrote his charming story, "The Arrow"—and other sights of London, more than I can possibly allude to.

Clear and handsome, these photographs show that strange blend of the traditional and the modern which places London alone among world capitals. Any Englishman in exile, any American with an Anglophile strain, can pore over these pages and gain a strong sense of the feeling which is making up the King's Jubilee.

WITH every topical writer on this side of the Atlantic making some mention of George V these days, it is not too easy to find a story about him which is not already in print. But here is a simple little tale involving him which I haven't seen elsewhere, once told to me by Nancy Astor's niece.

It seems that Henry Ford went to London one year, and the King wanted to have a quiet talk with him. A call at Buckingham Palace was thought too stately and conspicuous. In the indecision, Lady Astor came forward with the suggestion that the two might meet at her country place, and when this was carried out the most secluded corner for the chat seemed to be Lady Astor's private chapel. There His Majesty and Mr. Ford sat down.

On the same day, it chanced, a young American and his fiancee, friends of Lady Astor, arrived to be quietly married in said chapel. Lady Astor had forgot about that arrangement; Lady Astor was puzzled. But would the King mind the intrusion? Not at all. And then, more embarrassing, it appeared that the two young Americans had never thought about the necessity of witnesses. But you don't down a Langhorne, of Virginia—would the King be so kind? He would, said the good King, find it a pleasure.

And so, somewhere in this country, there is a young couple with possibly the most astonishing marriage certificate on record—signed by the Viscountess Astor, Henry Ford, and His Majesty George V, King of Great Britain and Ireland and of the British Dominions beyond the seas, Emperor of India.

Igoe followed.

"To begin with," Igoe declared, "I live in Chicago. I am not a candidate for Governor, which is not something that may be said about the gentleman who brought in this resolution."

Dirksen: "Will the gentleman yield?"

Igoe: "I do not yield to the gentleman."

Dirksen: "The gentleman is not a gentleman or he would not bring that matter up."

Igoe: "I refuse to yield to the gentleman."

Dirksen: "And, Mr. Speaker, I refuse to have such insinuations made about myself."

Igoe Continues.

Igoe: "The gentleman's actions now, Mr. Speaker, are typical of the conduct which has characterized his every-day activity in this House.

"I am not a candidate for Governor of Illinois. I do not think the gentleman who brought in this resolution can say the same thing about himself. If I were a candidate for Governor, I would not be quite so small as to come in here and attempt to attain my ambitious goal by destroying the good name of a fine man."

Applause came from the Democratic side when Igoe concluded. Striding nervously about the aisle, Dirksen vainly attempted to make a reply, but objections ended the argument.

6 Billion Spending Near Peace Record

Because of this more favorable showing, the Treasury is many months behind its borrowing program and still far from the public debt limit of $34,239,000,000 set by President Roosevelt in his last budget message.

The gross national debt on May 4, 1935, stood at $28,660,183,673, compared with $26,087,331,395 a year earlier. The Treasury still has $937,087,821 available cash on hand to meet excess expenditures for the next two months. Apparently in view of this condition new borrowings are likely to be held to a minimum up to the end of the fiscal year, June 30.

Thereafter future Government spending is likely to be dependent largely on how fast the new public works money can be spent and on economic recovery.

Jailed for Robbery Attempt.

Buckhannon, W. Va., May 7.—L. D. Shipman, 36, of Upshur County, has been sentenced to two years in the State penitentiary at Moundsville for attempting to rob a store in July, 1933. He was arrested the day of the robbery, but broke jail and was not recaptured until March, 1935.

Outlay by U. S. Road to Panic, Tydings Warns

Balanced Budget Needed to Avert Paper Money, He Tells League.

By the Associated Press.

New York, May 7.—Senator Tydings (Democrat), Maryland, told the National Economy League tonight that continued expenditure by the Government in excess of its revenue would lead to a financial panic and printing press money.

Tydings, who has proposed legislation under which Congress could appropriate no funds without making provision for raising the money, asserted that balancing of the budget, stabilization of international currencies, a revival of world trade, a measure of disarmament and settlement of the war debt question were essential to a real and lasting economic recovery.

"This policy of governmental borrowing is now in a phase where all persons should take heed," the Marylander said in an address at a banquet of the league.

"Danger" to Banks.

"There are several possible dangers. First, a decline in the market price of Government securities will impair the assets of banks which have invested in these securities.

"That is one danger, and no comment is needed to explain what a catastrophe that would be to the country. But suppose the policy of borrowing is carried to the extent that banks care not to purchase more Government securities?

"What happens then? If the Government can not sell its securities, fear enters the breast of every citizen and panic ensues.

"To prevent this fear, governments in that case make their own credit where no more is available from the banks or the citizens of the country. That credit is based on the printing press and takes little or no heed of whether or not there is gold or silver or commodities supporting the printed paper.

"As such printed paper money immediately declines in value because it is unsecured, then all credit of the Government likewise declines in value, even that which was at one time good."

Lewis W. Douglas, former Director of the Budget, envisioned a national monetary collapse and a political swing to dictatorship under continued trends of expending Federal funds in excess of receipts.

"History demonstrates without exception," he said, "that whenever a government continuously spends more than it takes in, the social consequences are tragic."

U.S. Ownership Of Ship Lines May Be Studied

By the Associated Press.

Intimation that outright Government ownership of the merchant marine may be studied behind closed congressional doors developed yesterday as the House Merchant Marine Committee neared the end of hearings on a ship subsidy bill.

To Republican committee members it same as a distinct surprise, and they did not hesitate to say so.

Committee members were popping questions at Ira Campbell, counsel for the American Steamship Owners Association, about the merits of Government or private ownership and operation of commercial ships or a combination of Government ownership with private operation.

Chairman Bland (Democrat), Virginia, co-author of the measure, said that was a matter for executive session discussion and that the committee should determine the best method of carrying out the views of the President on assisting the merchant marine.

"I am surprised to learn," interposed Representative Lehlbach (Republican), New Jersey, "that we are going to consider the question of Government ownership as opposed to private.

"If we are going to consider Government ownership, then considering this bill or any other bill is useless. If this is so, let's close these hearings and go into executive session and formulate the policy. It involves a fundamental change of polcy toward the merchant marine."

Happy Motoring!

A Future Debutante makes a pointed observation

Parents . . nowadays . . are a problem, aren't they? You simply have to be firm with them or they get completely out of hand.

Just take this matter of running the car.

Now, I want my parents to have all the fun and freedom possible. Goodness knows, no one likes a good time more than I do.

But parents are just at that impressionable age when all these filling stations . . with their bright pumps and luring claims . . offer a constant temptation.

So I took my stand early. I insisted that my parents patronize only Esso dealers and stations. Then I'd know what they were getting! For Esso station products . . backed by the world's leading petroleum organization . . are the proven best you can buy.

My parents have learned that when I put my foot down I mean it. So, believe me, when they need gas or oil . . or even tires, batteries and accessories . . you don't catch them driving in anywhere except at a familiar Esso sign!

And that takes a big load off my mind when I'm not along to look after things.

I'm sure that they're in good hands when they stop at an Esso sign and that they'll get all those little courtesies and services that assure "Happy Motoring."

I confess, if it weren't for these Esso dealers and stations I'd worry myself sick thinking what might happen when my parents go out driving by themselves. So I guess I've a lot to be thankful for, after all.

Parents are, indeed, a problem, aren't they?

The Gardners Ready to Open New Night Club

'Hot Cha' and Wife to Begin Urbana, Md., Venture Next Wednesday.

By Kay Ware.

Dick "Hot-Cha" Gardner and his wife, the former Ziegfeld beauty, Josephine Larkin, decided they'd had enough of radios and stages and footlights and what-not. So they said good-by to their public and bosses, settled down in Urbana, Md., and are all prepared to open a new night spot—"Hot Cha Club."

They've startled the cows with modernistic structure; will startle the natives with an 11-piece orchestra. They promise a floor show, but details about it have not been released.

The opening is set next Wednesday. Data on the managers: Dick recently completed a billing with George Olsen's orchestra in the air-spot that featured Ethel Shutta. Miss Larkin (Mrs. Gardner to us) was in Cochran's London Revue and the International Revue in New York several years ago.

The "Hot Cha" Club promises to be the first of its kind in this vicinity. It's a little more than 30 miles from the city.

The Digitanos are back at Heigh-Ho for a week's engagement. Next week there's to be a society girl, whose name is still a secret. Pete had a splendid time on the steamer Potomac's cruise Saturday, and is looking forward to playing the Variety Club's big function Friday at the Manor Club.

Ramon and Ruth, fresh from New York's Waldorf Astoria, are topping the show at the Shoreham. Be sure to see their "Two Guitars." Eddie Collis is still out there and singing "Every Day" and "Would There Be Love."

Charles Mayer, Maryland Club Garden's barytone, has returned to the show after an illness, so everybody's happy; dance-team Leonora and Santino specialize in boleros and cariocas; Sally Winston sings songs in a New York-ish manner; music by Al Barkley and his New Yorkers with solos by Arthur Sharpe and Peppy Snyder.

It's getting to be a racket at the Lotus. Bill Strickland was all fixed up with publicity and now Al Norton says, "Here I work here all day, slave away on presenting the show and writing the skits, and I never get my name in the paper."

Okay, Al.

Lotus' show: Lasar and Fedora, dance team, Gilbert and Fleurette, ditto; and a nicely turned-out chorus.

Ray Beck's nice voice grows tender this week over "Easy to Remember," an encore which is far better than the featured song, "I Just Dropped in to Tea."

Mae Miller, whom Washington has seen before, is back at La Paree this week. Does tap and acrobatic numbers.

Don't like to think of it in rainy weather, but Club Habana transplants to the Arlington roof on the twenty-ninth of the month. Meanwhile Susan Hall and Walter Doe are dancing at the club, Jimmy Brent, one of Moe Baer's boys, is doing triple duty as guitarist, tap dancer and vocalist.

Russ Cullen sang some old favorites a few nights ago. They were requests—"Poor Butterfly" and "I Woke Up Too Soon."

Because of crowds and subsequent embarrassment, the Willard has opened the Crystal Room to take care of Bamboo Room devotees. This addition is particularly necessary on Friday and Saturday nights.

Line-up at the Madrillon: Conchita Vita, with her Spanish dances; Marie Cartwright, blonde singing dancer; Leo Brusiloff and boys, with Jack Schaeffer, Ross Del Roy and Ray Donahue in featured numbers.

The steamer Potomac chugs up and down the river each evening, leaving Sixth and Water streets at 8:45 p. m. Big dance floor, Bernie Jarboe's music, nice cool spring air, and possibilities of moonlight.

Sunday night's trip will carry Art Godfrey and his orchestra. There is also a Sunday afternoon sailing (or is it steaming?) at 3 o'clock.

The Hawaiians at Hi-Hat have started a campaign to get "The Isle of Capri" off the list of requests. Here's how: They have made their own arrangement of "I Won't Dance" and "Lullaby of Broadway" and the fickle public is almost forgetting about the lady who had a plain golden ring on her finger.

Try "Old Smoothie" for the nicest long beverage. If you want the recipe, ask the waiter.

Managers of "Hot Cha Club"

Dick "Hot Cha" Gardner, and his wife, the former Josephine Larkin, are starting out with a new venture—the Hot Cha Club in Urbana, Md. The opening will be next Wednesday.

Broadway

By Ed Sullivan

New York, May 7.

Broadway at 42d St.

The Al Jolsons (Ruby Keeler) adopted a baby today in Chicago, another major prize in the Broadway Nursery Lottery. This lottery can be compared in value to the Irish Sweepstakes or the Canadian Sweeps, but with this distinction—the winners of the Broadway Nursery Lottery prizes are little codgers who have been left in foundling homes. These little babies buy no tickets in this particular lottery. Their tickets are their smiles, or the dimples in their cheeks, because first prizes go to those youngsters who have that certain something. For instance, not long ago, Burns and Allen went to the Cradle, famous Chicago foundling home, to adopt a baby. There were dozens of parentless tots spread out in cradles, all of them cooing and gurgling. As they passed through the aisles of cradles, one little girl burst out in a torrent of tears. Gracie Allen instinctively bent down to comfort the little thing, and the baby hooked her fingers in Miss Allen's hand. In the same motion, the tot hooked her fingers around Miss Allen's heart, for that was the one they adopted, a tiny Catholic. The Jack Bennys, through Rabbi Stephen Wise, adopted a baby in a Westchester home. The Jolsons will adopt their baby in Chicago, at the Cradle.

What kind of parents do these stage professionals make? Do they adopt babies for publicity purposes, or are they on the level? I can hear you asking these questions. The professionals make grand parents. Burns and Allen wouldn't travel any place unless the baby could go with them. The Jack Bennys would rather miss a broadcast than be separated from their youngster. Like all other fathers, Burns and Benny carry four or five pictures of the baby in their inner pockets, and if you suggest that the adopted tots look something like them, they really beam with pleasure. Jolson will make a marvelous father, and if his youngster ever grows up to be a football player on some school team, Al will pester all of us to death with descriptions of the lad's expertness. The Broadway Nursery Lottery is just about the nicest thing that has happened on the Stem in too many years.

Jesse Jones, the Texas millionaire, who stands high in the Roosevelt councils; Ben Smith, one of the biggest Wall street operators; Bruce Barton, Grant Rice, Thomas Fortune Ryan 3d; the Canadian gold mine tycoon, Jack Bickel; Deak Aylesworth, headman at N. B. C.; Walter Hughes, Capt. Eddie Rickenbacker, Arthur Hoffman, Kenneth Walsh, Stan Kahn and some others flew to the Kentucky Derby last Saturday. They left at 9:30 in the morning, and were there a little after 12:30 noon. The trip required 3 hours 45 minutes, contrasted to the 19 hours demanded by train. Pilot Dick Merrill, greatest of the transport pilots, shot high into the clouds to get above the fog and rain, and they didn't see the ground until he brought the big ship down at Louisville. Above Pittsburgh, Bickel, the Canadian multimillionaire, suggested a pool on the derby at $25 a horse. He bought two extra tickets for the pilot and co-pilot, and then addressed the wealthy passengers: "Gentlemen, I hope one or both of these pilots win first and second prize, but them as has gits, so probably one of you millionaires will pick the winner." His prediction was rght. Thomas Fortune Ryan 3d drew Omaha and first prize of $275.

Pity the poor politician! Johnny Crews, Brooklyn Republican leader, having dinner with me at George Stavros' place in Brooklyn last night, was complaining of feeling a bit run down. "Maybe you've been working too hard," I suggested, but he denied it. I insisted, so to humor me, he counted up the banquets he had attended in seven days. He was amazed at the total. In seven days he had delivered 37 speeches at 37 public affairs, and eaten 37 chicken dinners and 37 fruit cocktails. That's enough to make anybody feel run down. But Crews is an amazingly energetic person. He was elected to the New York State Assembly when he was 23.

Statisticians have deluged me with letters on the recent item about Charlie Pope's $412 bet that won $12,000. They point out that mathematical progression of a $2 bet would require a final bet of $512.

Back in the old days, when Uncle Henry woke to find a pink elephant dancing arm in arm with a green flamingo across the foot of his bed, he moaned for the doctor and swore off Welsh rarebit. But now, when Uncle Henry watches that same elephant balancing on his trunk, he just yawns with boredom and goes back to sleep. He's seen things far more strange in John Hix's cartoon, "Strange As It Seems," in The Washington Post each morning.

And, strange as it seems, each thing John Hix portrays in his daily cartoon is true, and its veracity is backed by documentary evidence. For instance, he can prove to you there is a Santa Claus, that women of an African tribe have lips 20 inches in length, that certain birds have hands and climb trees with them! In fact, we're expecting him to prove any day now that the moon really is made of green cheese . . . for, after following his cartoon for years, we're ready to believe anything.

"Strange As It Seems" is one of the most popular features in The Washington Post, and if you haven't been reading it each morning, we advise you to search for it and find out what strange and unbelievable things there are on this dusty old globe. Old forgotten facts of history, new scientific discoveries, odd things about famous people . . . Hix parades them all before your eyes, and there's always a word of explanation for the skeptical. Then, if you still don't believe him, you can ask for proof and he'll give it. Although most of his statements are in direct conflict with popular belief, he's as sure of his facts as Maxie Baer is of his popularity with the ladies.

You'll find "Strange As It Seems" each morning in your Washington Post, and perhaps you'll appreciate your own toast, bacon and eggs when you are told certain Asians consider roasted butterflies a delicacy, and certainly you won't mind a little Washington drizzle when you learn that, in some far-off corner of the world, it has rained continuously for centuries!

John Hix is our favorite cartoonist of weird things . . . but to us, the strangest thing about "Strange As It Seems" is how he digs up all those odd facts with which to confound us. We like him . . . and so will you when you read his cartoon each day in

First Lady Entertained By 72d Club

Mrs. Roosevelt to Leave on Trip Today After Luncheon.

By Evelyn Peyton Gordon.

Busy days are ahead for the President and Mrs. Roosevelt, and interesting days. Mrs. Roosevelt held her weekly press conference yesterday morning at which she announced some of her plans for the coming week. Mrs. Roosevelt was the guest of honor of the ladies of the Seventy-second Congressional Club at the Shoreham yesterday.

Spring flowers in orchid, yellow and white were used effectively with ferns for the table decorations. The guests were seated at one long table, and both Mrs. Roosevelt and Mrs. Brent Spence, president of the club, wore corsages of flowers in the same shades as those in the centerpieces.

Mrs. Wesley Disney had arranged a delightful program of music and dancing, and Mrs. John H. Overton, Mrs. Martin Dies, Mrs. Andrew J. May and Mrs. William N. Rogers were members of the committee on arrangements.

Mrs. Roosevelt entertained yesterday afternoon at a reception for the Federation of Music Clubs from 3 until 4 o'clock, and from 5 until 6 o'clock received the members of the League of Women Voters.

Large Luncheon Today.

There will be a large luncheon at the White House today with Mrs. Roosevelt as hostess, and later in the day she will leave for a trip of several days. She will be away until next Tuesday, and on next Wednesday the ladies of the Cabinet will entertain at a picnic luncheon in the White House gardens for the Senate ladies. That same day the Gov. of New York and Mrs. Herbert H. Lehman will arrive to be overnight guests at the White House. On May 16 the President and Mrs. Roosevelt will entertain at the annual garden party for war veterans.

President Roosevelt has changed his week-end plans in tribute to Rear Admiral Richard Evelyn Byrd and the members of the second Antarctic expedition, who will arrive Friday afternoon. Instead of leaving on the presidential yacht Sequoia for a cruise, the Chief Executive will remain at the White House, where Admiral and Mrs. Byrd will be his overnight guests.

Summer Plans Tentative.

The summer plans of the President and Mrs. Roosevelt as yet are tentative, but they plan to spend their summer very much as they did last season. The President will take a long cruise, and Mrs. Roosevelt will go to Campobello, the family camp in Maine.

Franklin, jr., and John Roosevelt, both of whom are on the varsity crews, will pursue their own course of visits with friends, and both will do some form of work during a part of their vacation when they leave Harvard in June. Buzzie and Sistie Dall, children of Mrs. John Boettiger, who are with their mother in New York, will spend the greater part of the summer at Hyde Park, the home in New York State which the President and Mrs. Roosevelt will keep open all summer.

Amy Behrend's Wedding Held At Capital Home

Julius Goldstein and Bride Going to West Indies on Bridal Trip.

Mr. and Mrs. Rudolph B. Behrend, 3814 Military road, announce the marriage of their daughter, Miss Amy Nordlinger Behrend, and Mr. Julius Goldstein, which took place yesterday at noon at the home of the bride's parents. Rabbi Abram Simon performed the ceremony. Mr. Goldstein is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Goldstein, of Roanoke, Va.

Violin and organ music was played during the ceremony and included the prelude and wedding march from "Lohengrin" and Mendelssohn's wedding march. The bride wore a gown of ivory wedding-ring satin, fashioned with long sleeves and a high neck and with a bolero of duchess lace. A lace panel, which was worn by the mother and grandmother of the bride, fell in train effect from the hem of the skirt and was mounted on ivory tulle. She carried white orchids and lilies of the valley.

Sister Attends Bride.

Attending the bride was her sister, Miss Ruth N. Behrend, who wore hydrangea chiffon with hat and slippers of deeper blue, and who carried a bouquet of French lilacs. Mr. Julius Halpern, of Roanoke, Va., a cousin of the bridegroom, acted as best man. The bride's mother wore a gown of black crepe with ruffled collar and cuffs with a corsage of pink orchids. Mrs. Goldstein, mother of the bridegroom, was gowned in black with a corsage of orchids.

The ceremony was followed by a breakfast for members of the immediate families and an informal reception later for close friends.

Ceremony at St. John's Is Attended by Number of Social Leaders.

St. John's Episcopal Church was the setting yesterday of the marriage of Miss Kathleen Downs Talley, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Lynn P. Talley, of 2540 Massachusetts avenue, to Mr. Charles Metcalf Spence, son of Mrs. Wendell Spence, of St. Louis. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. Oliver J. Hart, D. D., pastor of the church, in the presence of many members of fashionable and official society.

The bride, who was given in marriage by her father, wore an ivory satin gown made with a high-cowl neckline, long, full sleeves and train. The gown was trimmed simply with a row of covered buttons extending from the neck to waist in the back. The bride's only ornament was a diamond brooch and she wore two veils which fell from a halo of old lace. Her English half veil, banded in rare old lace, was worn by her mother at her wedding. She carried a bouquet of gardenias, lilies of the valley and orchids.

Miss Martha Downs Talley was her sister's maid of honor. She wore a close-fitting gown of blue mousseline de soie, with ruffles extending from the knees and terminating in a short train. A ruffled cape covered her shoulders. Her hat was a small tailored model, trimmed with a smart bow of the same material as her gown.

The six bridesmaids—Miss Anella Slaughter, of Dallas, Tex.; Miss Frances Haven, of Atlanta, Ga.; Miss Nancy Brown, of Columbus, Ohio; Mrs. E. M. Rollins, of Dallas, Tex.; Miss Carolyn Talley and Miss Beatrice Talley, both sisters of the bride—wore gowns and hats of pink mousseline de soie fashioned similarly to that worn by the maid of honor. Small ruffled capes covered their shoulders and each of the attendants wore a small rhinestone clip at the neck of the cape, a gift of the bride. Judy Ely was flower girl, and also was gowned in pink mousseline de soie, with short puffed sleeves, ruffles around the bottom of her dress and a large sash in corresponding shade. All of the attendants carried large bouquets of spring flowers, with pink predominating.

Mrs. Talley, mother of the bride, was gowned in blue chiffon with a short blue lace cape, a large blue hat and accessories in similar color. Mrs. Spence, mother of the bridegroom, wore black lace over black taffeta with net sleeves and a small black hat.

Mr. George W. Holmes, of St. Louis, was Mr. Spence's best man. The ushers included Mr. Kenneth Hackler, of New York City; Mr. William Boyd, of Philadelphia; Mr. Robert Mackey, of Cleveland; Mr. Quinn Shaughnessy, of Washington; Mr. Charles Bodurtha, of Cleveland, and Mr. Donald Black, of Washington.

Mr. Spence and his bride will be at home after June 1 at 3745 Linden boulevard, St. Louis.

Among the wedding guests were Mr. and Mrs. George Holmes, Mr. and Mrs. T. Herbert Case, of New York City; Mr. and Mrs. William H. House of Mercy Benefit Lecture Set for May 21

Gordon Dunthorne to Give Talk on English Gardens in Whitby Hall.

A lecture on "Seventeenth and Eighteenth Century English Gardens," by Gordon Dunthorne, M. A., of Oxford University, will be given in Whitby Hall, at Woodley road and Thirty-sixth street northwest May 21, for the benefit of the House of Mercy.

Mr. Dunthorne has lectured before the leading garden clubs throughout the country. Recently he addressed the Botanic Club and the Horticultural Society of New York. His book collection was started because there was no book of reference dealing with flower prints—as he discovered to his dismay after he had consented to give a lecture on the subject. This lecture will be given instead of the garden party which has been given each spring.

There will be an exhibit of flower and garden prints at the close of the lecture.

Patronesses will be: Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt, Lady Lindsay, Mrs. James E. Freeman, Mrs. Ridgely Hunt, Mrs. William Culbertson, Mrs. John L. Proctor, Mrs. George Maurice Morris, Mrs. R. M. Kauffmann, Mrs. Pierre Gaillard, Mrs. L. Corrin Strong, Mrs. Whitman Cross, Mrs. Cazenova G. Lee, jr., Mrs. Frank B. Noyes, Mrs. Robert Woods Bliss, Mrs. Charles E. Hughes, Mrs. George N. Peek, Mrs. Gibson Fahnestock, Mrs. Anson Phelps Stokes and Miss Kibby.

Mrs. Roan Here For Convention Of Vote League

Director of Organization Describes Departure From Traditions.

By Hope Ridings Miller.

WOMEN OF the Old South prided themselves on being "lily ladies" who neither toiled nor spun, nor were interested in anything except their children, their husbands and their homes.

But women of the modern South are breaking away from traditions that circumscribed the interests and activities of their grandmothers. In contrast to their feminine forbears, who were content to be the background for male members of the family, women in the South today are very much concerned with the whys and wherefores of good government and are educating themselves to vote intelligently for men who are statesmen—rather than mere politicians—and measures that are constructive—rather than monuments to political parties.

These are observations of Mrs. Augustus M. Roan, of Atlanta, Ga., who is in Washington to attend the fifteenth annual convention of the National League of Women Voters, of which she is a director.

Long Interested in Politics.

Born, reared and educated in Georgia, Mrs. Roan is typical of modern Southern women. Her soft "r's," the drawl in her voice and her gracious manner reveal she has much in common with the Southern woman of the past. Yet her keen interest in the machinery of the Government, and her enthusiasm to make that machinery run as smoothly, efficiently and economically as possible prove she is also concerned with keeping abreast of the world.

Her interest in political science, evident when she was in college, definitely came to a head when, after graduation, she became a member of the League of Women Voters, choosing that organization rather than any other woman's club because "the members are more civic minded, more concerned with good government."

First becoming president of the DeKalb County, Ga., league, later she also was made director of the third region, which includes the duty of being "adviser" to the leagues in Virginia, North and South Carolina, Tennessee, Alabama, Georgia, Florida and the District of Columbia.

Her work among Southern women has convinced her woman's place in the world has not changed, but that her type of service has changed; that women all over the country are working by new standards.

Husband Is a Judge.

"In my grandmother's day, woman had no place in public activities, partially because she did not have the privilege to vote and partially because her husband was convinced that home was her rightful sphere," Mrs. Roan said. "But with suffrage for women there came new responsibilities that gradually brought women—even those not gainfully employed—out into public life."

Modern Southern women, in contrast to their feminine forebears, are becoming increasingly interested in Government, economics and political science, reports Mrs. Augustus M. Roan, of Atlanta, Ga., here to attend the convention of the League of Women Voters.

She mentioned, however, there are some Southern men, even today, who still insist that their wives limit their activity to domestic duties.

"My husband, however, encourages me to take an active part in civic movements," she said. (Her husband is Judge Roan of the municipal court in Atlanta.) "And judging from the great number of women who are members of the league, it would seem many Southern men are eager for their wives to devote their time to its work.

She also pointed out that in the past many Southern women were kept busy managing many servants on huge plantations and had little time for outside activities, even if they had been inclined to take an interest in public affairs. "Now we have smaller establishments with few (if any servants) and there are, consequently, fewer home duties to keep us occupied."

Mrs. Roan's work as a director of the League of Women Voters has also caused her to keep closely in touch with the political science departments of universities throughout the South.

"Through this medium I have learned that Southern girls, in increasing numbers, are enrolling for courses in economics and political science, where their grandmothers would probably have elected courses in domestic science," she said.

This, Mrs. Roan believes, is an indication that feminine voters of tomorrow will be very much concerned with carrying on the type of work now being done by the League of Women Voters.

Show Glorifies French Women

Exhibit in N. Y. Includes Portraits and Souvenirs of Notables.

THE ROAD to feminine fame in France up to the present century has been largely through social life, an exhibit that has just been opened in New York reveals.

The show, called "Famous Women of French History," opened the Gallery for French Art in the Rockefeller Center Maison Francaise. It includes portraits, souvenirs and possessions of women who have achieved fame in French history up to 1900.

Discouraging to feminists is the fact that of the women chosen for glorification by Dr. M. Therese Bonney, director of the gallery, 13 or more are wives of kings, 8 are kings' relatives and 5 are kings' mistresses.

Also included are two religious sisters, one murderess, one saint, four actresses, seven women associated to some extent with letters, three keepers of salons, two painters and the wife of an author, Mme. Victor Hugo.

Among the women honored are Joan of Arc, the Empress Eugenie, Marie de Plessis, original of "Camille;" Marie Antoinette, Sarah Bernhardt, Mme. de Loynes, famous hostess; the Marquise du Deffand and Mme. de Pompadour, mistresses of Louis XV; Charlotte Corday, Josephine and Marie Louise, wives of Napoleon; Marie Stuart Gabrielle d'Estrees, Rosa Bonheur, George Sand and Marie de Medici.

$5,102 Annually By 1940 Is Hope Collegians Voice

An annual income of $5,102 is what the average senior at Columbia College expects to be making five years from now, a poll conducted by the college's year book shows. Last year a similar poll revealed the average senior had hopes of making $3,600 annually within five years.

Of the 120 seniors who answered the questionnaire, 22 said they intend to become engineers, 21 lawyers, 16 physicians and 12 teachers.

Gertrude Stein was voted "the least liked author" while "Anthony Adverse" was voted the favorite book.

What TODAY Means

"Taurus."

IF MAY 8 is your birthday, the best hours for you on this date are from 11:15 a. m. to 1:15 p. m., from 3:15 to 5:15 p. m. and from 7:15 to 9:15 p. m. The danger periods are from 8:15 to 10:15 a. m., from 1:15 to 3:15 p. m. and from 9:15 to 11:15 p. m.

There is danger on this date in depending too much on others to comply with your wishes or orders. Make it a point to keep in close contact, so as to see your wishes are carried out in a satisfactory manner. It is likely to be good judgment, in matters of importance, to have personal interviews whenever it is possible instead of telephone conversations or written communications.

In your social contacts on this day, it might be best to confine your conversation to impersonal subjects, as there is very little likelihood that those you meet in a neighborly or festive way will be interested in your private personal affairs. There is a possibility that strong likes as well as dislikes will be formed on this date, so it may behoove you to be diplomatic, as well as careful, should you meet strangers or casual acquaintances.

Married and engaged couples, as well as those seeking some one to share marriage bliss, will be wise to guard against any outside influences to cause them to question any motive or act.

If a woman and May 8 is your birthday, you probably respond favorable to any form of physical exercise, which should be taken daily, if you feel the need of it. Your perseverance rarely permits you to acknowledge defeat, with the result that you should be able to accomplish whatever you make up your mind to do. You probably are very fond of all forms of social activities and it will be to your advantage to participate in them whenever it is possible.

Love will have a great deal to offer you, so be careful not to spurn it. Do not permit your worldly contacts to cause you to become callous or suspicious, for unhappiness may result. Physical culture, dancing, secretarial or office work are agencies through which you are likely to obtain excellent results as a wage earner.

The child born on May 8 when it reacher its teens, may be far more amenable to kindly and affectionate methods of discipline than to harsh ones. So avoid harshness.

If a man and May 8 is your natal day, a cheerful disposition is needful if you seek public recognition of your merits. You have the ability to control your emotions and it will pay you well to do so. Banking, medicine, music, painting, as well as writing, are some of the vocations through which you might find the best means of self-expression.

This BUSINESS of LIVING

By Mary Haworth.

DEAR MISS HAWORTH: I am the widowed mother of three boys ranging in ages from 19 to 25. Mine is the almost impossible task of trying to be father and mother both—trying to give a father's discipline and a mother's love—to them in these discouraging depression years; trying to keep them forward-looking and ambitious, happy and self-respecting, in a world which seems to have no place for them.

* * * *

My eldest son had dreamed of a career in the diplomatic service, directing his education to that end. His dream shattered by his father's death six years ago, when has education was foreshortened by dwindling income, he has become taut with nerves, brooding and difficult. He has had two temporary jobs of the most inconsequential sort with the Government, but now is "loafing" again.

* * * *

The second son has fared little better. Before his father died he was thinking of taking up newspaper work eventually. Now he has a clerical position in a friend's office, given him mostly out of sympathy, at a salary that would scarcely support him away from the parental roof.

The youngest son is still in school and has thought of entering medicine, but has almost relinquished the idea because of the long grind before he could qualify. At considerable sacrifice and penny-pinching, I managed to have the two older boys finish their regular college courses after their father's death, but the prospect is not so bright for my youngest, as I fear this may be the last year of schooling I can give him.

* * * *

I, too, have been studying to prepare myself for the business world, and altthough given kindly encouragement by my teachers, have had no success as yet in finding a place.

* * * *

I'm afraid unless I can get a better grasp on the situation they will never amount to anything. Is this morbidity? And what can I do?

DISCOURAGED.

Long View of Life.

DEAR DISCOURAGED: As I see it, your principal danger of losing control of the situation lies in tacitly taking the whole burden on your shoulders; in trying to play Providence; in trying overmuch to shield your sons from contact with disillusioning reality and thus preventing them in their plastic years from working out their own individual, healthful adjustment to a social pattern, which shifts with every generation.

I am afraid you have constituted yourself life's emissary of apology to your sons for having withdrawn the silver spoons from their mouths, rather than the dauntless organizer of a modern group comparable to the "Swiss Family Robinson," high-heartedly fashioning a satisfactory new way of living with whatever tools financial shipwreck has left you. And these tools are many: health, education, friends, a roof over your heads, probably a pioneering tradition, an income adequate to your basic needs.

* * * *

This is no time for crying after what-might-have-been; for the grapefruit and caviar, the orchids and the velvet of the cleared highway of social and economic security. Like Lot's wife, if you pause to look backward now, you may expect to find yourselves, individually or as a group, transmuted into a non-vital pillar of crumbling salt.

* * * *

The important, constructive thing to do—and which can always be done now—is to keep yourselves mentally and physically busy with study, with athletic exercise and recreation, with social diversion, with attempted mastery of the manifold handicrafts which rouse the creative talent latent in nearly everyone and afford a practical means of beautifying one's immediate environment.

* * * *

Never again, probably, will your sons have such leisure in which to avail themselves of the wealth of practical and cultural information within easy reach at local libraries, museums, art galleries.

* * * *

Never again will they have such opportunity to discover the simple truth that lasting happiness, peace and contentment come from within, and not from pomp and circumstance; to get acquainted with themselves in quiet hours of comparative solitude, with books of biography, history, science and great fiction for companionship; to think the long thoughts which result in character growth. But again, you must set the example—and in setting such example, you will find it easier to be serene and optimistic; you will be vanquishing morbidity.

* * * *

Lastly, by achieving the long view of life; by looking at the immediate present in the light of history; by walking in the footsteps of great men hrough reading biography, you will acquire the vision which penetrates the fog of short-sighted pessimism.

Baroness Describes Life In Abyssinian Capital

Harris & Ewing.

Women have an easy life in Abyssynia, says Baroness von Schoen, recently returned from that country.

Native Women Lead an Easy Life, Capital Visitor Says.

TWO FULL YEARS in Abyssinia. Yet the Baroness von Schoen, formerly Katherine Birney, of Washington, has no more to say about that strange, far away country than if she had spent those two years in Brooklyn.

Most of her reluctance to speak, she admitted yesterday, is because the Abyssinians are exceedingly sensitive. They think they are being ridiculed when anyone comments on their customs, their native characteristics. If the country were invaded by a steady stream of tourists the natives undoubtedly would get used to being considered "just too quaint" or "primitive."

But there are virtually no tourists in Abyssinia year in and year out, the baroness explained yesterday. Her husband was sent there as German minister. Within a few weeks the Von Schoens will go to the baron's new post in Chile. While here Katherine Birney von Schoen is visiting her sister, Mrs. Edward R. Finkenstaedt.

Hunting Heads Recreation.

Life in Abyssinia's capital, Addis Ababa, is delightful for members of the diplomatic corps and their families, according to the baroness. Each legation is surrounded by a large park. In the town are a handful of moving-picture theaters and at least two cabarets. The Von Schoens and their friends in the corps spent little time there, however.

"We really lived much as if we had been far out in the country," the baroness said as she sat in her sister's drawing room at 3028 N street northwest. "There was a great deal of hunting. But while I saw many lion skins I never actually met a lion."

She did not see huge gazelles, black and white monkeys almost as large as man; rhinoceros and hippopotami. Abyssinia is so rich in animals that most zoos have obtained about half of their supply there, the baroness explained.

Women Lead Easy Life.

As for the people—Baroness von Schoen came in close contact only with those attached to the Emperor's Palace. But she learned women throughout the country have an easy time of it. Drawing water and carrying it on their shoulders is about all the work they do. Although all the natives have complexions which can only be described as black, their features are far from Negroid.

"The people are fine looking," the baroness said, "and nothing makes them so angry as to be considered Negroes."

The Von Schoens will miss Abyssinia, but they are looking forward to their residence in Chile, the baroness said. She is busy selecting a couple of dozen pairs of shoes, enough to last her three years. She has found it is impossible to wear foreign shoes.

A Pre-Emptive Bid.

Yesterday I gave an example of a pre-emptive bid which turned out most disastrously for the pre-empter. I mentioned it as an exception rather than the rule. Generally, pre-emptive bids can keep the finest of opposition out of its correct spot. The one I made in the deal below against Mr. and Mrs. Sims during the recent match turned out well. The attacking value of the hand was a tower of strength and the hundred honors a safety brake for a possible set if my partner held a Yarborough.

South	West	North	East

1—I knew my partner would read my three-heart bid as a weakness shut-out bid and would not raise me to game, thus inviting a double.

2—West knew my pre-empts, as dealer or second hand, are made on weak hands. With four trumps and good scattered outside honor strength, he felt impelled to take some action, and doubles. From his holding, he preferred the double to be left in for penalties, but expected a takeout on a strong, or unusually distributed hand.

3—East, in all probability, should have considered taking out with three spades. But East suspected from her own singleton in hearts that her partner's double was predicated on some trump strength and that he did not particularly desire a takeout. East admittedly had a very difficult decision to make and in this particular instance decided incorrectly. Even if East had bid three spades, it is doubtful of the East-West partnership could ever have gotten together on clubs, as West would probably have passed to three spades.

The Play.

The opponents took two club tricks, two spade tricks and a diamond, defeating the contract 100 points. A double dummy defense consisting of cashing two clubs, one diamond and two spades immediately, followed by a third round of spades from East, would have defeated me one more trick, or 300 points as the third round of spades would have given West a trump trick. If I trumped high, West's nine would stand up and if I trumped low, he would naturally overruff. However, the opponents, without much difficulty, could have made five clubs. Admittedly, they needed only to drop the Queen of clubs or find a successful finesse in diamonds or spades.

Big Turkey Crop Predicted for Fall

By the Associated Press.

Washington, Iowa, May 5.—It's a bit early to begin talking about Thanksgiving dinner, but just in case some folks might be wondering about the turkey crop, a local hatchery expects to have 400,000 birds for the market.

And that, say the owners, will be 100,000 more turkeys than they had last year. So far, 150,000 birds have been hatched this year. The first turkeys, hatched shortly after Christmas, now weigh six pounds.

Mr. Vrionides is the director of the Greek Cathedral Choir of New York City and lecturer on "Music from Primitive to Modern" at the Roerich Museum, New York.

Besides its beauty and its interest as early church music, the Byzantine has great historical value as the "inheritor" of the lost ancient Greek musc. A group of Greek folk songs also will be included in the program.

Among those who will attend are the newly appointed Minister of Greece, Demetrius Sicilianos, and a number of composers and music lovers here.

Etching on Cliff Gives Virgin Island Its Name

An almost perfect etching of the Madonna with the Christ Child in her arms on one of the cliffs of an island off the southern coast of Nova Scotia has caused the place to be called "Virgin's Island." No human being has ever set foot on its rock-bound shores. Frequent lapping of waves against the steep cliff, storms and frost have created the Madonna etching.

Cotton Lace Suits Take Spotlight

The pretty young model in the picture above has selected a cool, trim white cotton lace suit for summer daytime wear. To give it that added bit of femininity and dressiness she has chosen a jabot and cuffs of novelty net, and a hat matching her frock.

Fashion Mentors Design Them With View to Feminine Charm.

Almost Wrinkle Proof, They Are Practical for Office Wear.

FOR THE SPRING and summer wardrobe, fashion has decreed suits. So, suits it is. But come the lamentations of the pretty miss who prefers laces and organdies and the swishing of taffetas to the severity of the suit. Fashion mentors racked their brains. How to combine dainty femininity with the plain and tailored, they wondered.

The solution was reached with the creation of cotton lace suits worn over colored linen, and set off with net and organdy jabots and cuffs.

They offer a pleasing variation to the general suit theme. Fall and winter saw flannel and woolen coat-suits, for the most part designed on masculine lines with double or single breasted semi-fitted coat, sharp lapels and straight skirts often slit on either side. With warmer weather came plain linens in almost identical styles. Now at last come the unusual laces offering a dainty and feminine charm all their own.

While many of the summer and spring linen suits are made of such heavy material they are not easily mussed, the lace suits offer even greater advantages. They are nearly wrinkle proof. To the women in the office as well as the housewife on a limited budget this means much. To her it is a boon to own a suit which she may wear several days in the week without sending it out for a pressing.

Cotton lace suits meet another need in her wardrobe. They are equally appropriate for street and office for the late afternoon cocktail hour. Every woman knows what a bother it is to rush home for a change of dress before filling her after-office date. But with these tailored suits with their subtle suggestion of dressiness she may feel appropriately garbed wherever she goes.

Cotton lace suits come this season in soft pastel shades and in solid white. They are frequently worn with hats and gloves of contrasting colors.

French Women Rely on Scent's Psychic Power

Expert Deplores American Use of Same Perfume on All Occasions.

By Ruth Anne Davis.

TO THE AMERICAN woman a perfume is but a delightful fragrance which she wears much in the same spirit she carries her new handbag, or any other attractive accessory. But to the French woman there is a psychic power about perfume. It accentuates her personality; it affects her moods; it is the poetry of everyday life. She believes that for all occasions there is a proper perfume just as there is an appropriate costume. To her every mood has its counterpart in perfume.

It was interesting to hear Miss Day talk about perfumes. Miss Agnes Day, she is, special representative for one of the largest, oldest and most respected French perfume concerns. All this week she stands behind the Parisian-looking perfume counter in a local store and helps customer after customer find some new charm and new meaning in perfume.

She doesn't try to select your perfume for you. That would be ridiculous! "Why, how can I see a customer for one minnte and tell her what type of person she is, how she feels, or gauge the variations of her moods? Oh, no. I would not select her perfume! She must do that. I only help her understand perfume so that she knows what scents are truly hers."

Miss Day says she has noticed how many American women choose to be identified by one fragrance. They wear it morning, noon and night, wherever they go, however they feel. She deplores this. The French woman, on the other hand, she says, knows that there is charm in infinite variety.

"These French women pay just as much attention to what perfume they should wear as to what dress," said Miss Day. "The American woman gives the matter little thought," she said. "Half the time she doesn't even remember to use perfume at all." On the other hand, French women not only spend time and thought on their choice of perfumes, but have made a fine art of using them.

Miss Day explained that they knew exactly how to use perfume to show it off to best advantage. In the first place, she said, they always spray the scent against the skin. They seldom use droppers, and never put perfume on clothes.

There's a very good reason for this, according to the young representative. Perfume, she said, reacts with the natural body oils and changes slightly as soon as it is applied. It follows that the same perfume on two people will be slightly different on each.

The company which sponsors Miss Day's appearance in Washington makes 483 products, 80 of which are perfumes.

You will find that it is a rare treat to talk to a real perfume expert and under her guiding hand take a sniff at as many fragrances as you're equal to. Don't forget she's holding court in a local store. Once through the front door just follow your nose!

Annual Sale On.

Old Papa Time has been busy with his scythe cutting through the leaves of the calendar. He has worked so quickly it is hard to realize that a year has passed and it's time again for the annual sale of a certain line of cosmetics.

Those of you familiar with the preparations well know that now is the time to stock up on them. All this week they cost 20 per cent less than usual! Others who have yet to make their acquaintance will find it profitable to do so during the sale.

One of the very best products in the line is the herbal throat and neck blend and the astringent for use with it.

Both of these splendid beauty aids were created especially for the woman whose contour is beginning to sag and whose neck is wrinkled and crepey. Used together according to directions they firm the droopy flesh, tighten it and restore youthful smoothness. They are highly recommended for that relaxed chin which hangs in lazy folds.

Perhaps if you've no need for these you'll find the cleansing cream, the fine powders, or ever so indelible lipsticks exactly what you'd like to buy at reduced prices. There are ever so many things to choose from—so don't delay!

Answers To Inquiries.

From out of the letter box today we have chosen a short note which we hope will prove of interest to readers of the column.

Query—I have very oily skin and as the weather grows warmer it shines more and more. Do you think my using creams aggravates the condition? A. L.

Answer—Sad, but true, creams do tend to make an oily skin oilier in most cases. Why don't you try a liquid cleanser, or, if you prefer, a liquefying cleansing cream. Always follow the cream with a skin tonic which will cut any surplus oil left on the skin surface.

Now About Nail Polish.

Query—Do you know of any nail polishes that will not thicken and dry up? Kay.

Answer—Write to us, inclosing a self-addressed, stamped envelope and we'll be glad to tell you the name of a very good one.

Careful Choices of Other Dishes Makes Ham Dinner Inexpensive

Sample Menu Is Suggested With Shoe-String Potatoes, Creamed Celery, Cucumbers and Rhubard Sponge Pudding.

By Dorothea Duncan.

TODAY let's break the bonds of economy and treat the family to a luscious bit of broiled ham. A thick cut of broiling ham will rocket the week's meat cost upward, so the budget must be brought back to the normal level with a careful selection of inexpensive, but appetizing and appropriate accompaniments.

Let's pan-broil the ham. Place it in a skillet and cover with cold water. When the water comes to a boil, pour it off. Cook the ham until browned on both sides and then cook slowly, turning often, until thoroughly cooked. Cover during the latter part of cooking. The ham should be tender and juicy if cooked this way.

Place the ham on a platter and keep it warm. Mix a little hot water with the ham essence in the skillet and when it begins to bubble, lay in several slices of drained canned pineapple to heat and absorb the juice. When thoroughly heated, place the pineapple rings, which have been cut in two, cut side around the ham.

Question of Potatoes.

Creamed celery will complement the broiled ham and it is inexpensive. Instead of serving the celery in a separate dish, pour it over the center of the sliced ham.

Now it is time to think of the potatoes for this type of meal. If you want to get your meal in a hurry, try the shoe-string potatoes that come already prepared. They may be heated in the oven just before serving. Small new potatoes cooked in the jackets and skinned and served with melted butter and finely chopped parsley will be an attractive choice too.

You will want a green salad, too, or perhaps just a bowl of cucumbers with a thin, sharp dressing. And now for a dessert, a good one, but one that is seasonable and inexpensive. Let's try a rhubarb sponge pudding. Here is the recipe:

Rhubarb Sponge Pudding.

¾ cup honey
1 cup water
1 tablespoon granulated gelatin
¼ cup cold water
½ cup milk, heated to scalding
1-3 cup sugar
2 egg whites, beaten
6 tablespoons whipped cream

Place rhubarb in pan, add honey and water and bake in a moderate oven (350 degrees F.) until tender, about one hour. Soften gelatin in cold water and pour over it hot milk to which sugar has been added. Blend thoroughly, stirring until both sugar and gelatin are dissolved. Set mixture in cool place until it begins to stiffen. Then beat in one cup of cold rhubarb sauce. Lastly fold in egg whites. Turn sponge into mold. Chill until set. Serve with remaining rhubarb sauce and garnish with whipped cream. Serves six. Whipped cream may be omitted if you prefer to make the dessert less rich and cut down on the expense.

Forge Is Restored At Gretna Green

Woman Seeks to Revive Famed Wedding Site.

In the hope of restoring Gretna Green, Scotland, to its former prosperity, a young woman has taken over the old blacksmith's forge where thousands of runaway couples in the past have exchanged wedding vows. For a good many years now only a few romantic couples have journeyed to the famous little settlement just over the English boundary. The relic and souvenir business has also fallen off.

Hence an enterprising young woman has not only learned the art of the smithy, but has obtained a Presbyterian license to perform the marriage ceremony. She and her backers hope the old forge at Gretna Green will once more attract prospective brides and bridegrooms.

Quart of Milk A Day Supplies Calcium Needs

Deficiency of Mineral in Diet Has Bad Effect, Physician Warns.

By Dr. Irving S. Cutter.

THE BODY NEEDS CALCIUM.

HOW many of us remember the "ossified man" that we saw in the side show when we were youngsters? "His body has turned to stone," shouted the barker, and we paid a dime to see a poor unfortunate chap suffering from a severe grade of arthritis who could scarcely move a single joint in his body. The deposits of calcium (lime) in the tendon sheaths and around joints had fused these areas together, resulting in a stiff, rigid skeleton. In addition, muscles had withered, giving the appearance of a calcified body.

Some years ago H. C. Sherman announced that "probably a larger portion of the ordinary dietaries, both of adults and children, can be improved by enrichment in calcium than in any other one chemical element." Physicians now know that Sherman did not exaggerate the situation. Investigation of the food habits of more than 4,000 New York hospital patients has revealed only two individuals whose diets contained an adequate amount of calcium.

It has been known for many years that the bones of old persons contain less calcium than those in the younger age groups. Therefore, we can understand why in those beyond middle life fractures heal slowly and in some cases not at all. It is believed that the decrease in calcium in the bone is the result of a long-continued deficiency in the diet.

In the adult body only a small proportion of the calcium taken by mouth is absorbed. The normal adult requires a minimum of six or eight grains a day, but, because a large part of the calcium taken with food is thrown off through the bowel, the average daily intake should be not less than 10 to 15 grains—perhaps much more.

It is also known that calcium absorption is decreased by imperfect fat digestion, as well as by any condition in the bowel that increases acidity. Three substances of the body are closely related—calcium, protein and phosphorus. Calcium will not be retained in the body unless proper amounts of protein and phosphorus are present. If the diet is low in calcium the blood has a tendency to withdraw calcium from the bones. This is particularly disadvantageous in growing children and in pregnant women. In the condition known as rickets in children, it is of the greatest importance that the normal ratio between phosphorus and calcium shall be maintained. Calcium alone will have no effect upon the disease, whereas calcium plus phosphorus, plus the presence of proper vitamins will prevent the onset of the condition.

Infants and growing children absorb and retain a high percentage of food calcium, and the amount probably bears a direct relation to the vitamin supply. Vitamins A, C and D are closely related to the absorption of calcium and phosphorus and to the development of bones and teeth. Growing children need calcium for bone formation, hence they will absorb and retain larger amounts than will adults.

The GAME of LIFE

By Priscilla Wayne

Ellen Mallory gives up a promising career as a tennis champion, and also a job in a real estate office, to marry Michael Dale, although her mother disapproves. In addition to her mother's attitude, Ellen is harassed by a large family debt which she will have to pay. Clarence and Lou, who attended Ellen's wedding, come to see her, and Lou confides that she is going to have a baby.

LOU agreed. "I know it's going to be wonderful I've—I've always wanted a baby—but it's not convenient now."

"I guess," Ellen said with perfect truthfulness, "that the blessed little things rarely do make their appearance when it's perfectly convenient. Mike and I want to raise a family—but not for years yet," hastily, "Why we've got to get this house paid for and—"

Lou laughed, albeit a touch bitterly. "Well, take my advice, Ellen, and don't be surprised—at anything. Clarence and I planned for a family—too—in the future."

Altogether Ellen was relieved when Lou and Clarence went home. Clarence had spent much of his time down at the garage with Mike, and Lou had lacked a great deal of being pleasant company.

The days slipped on and summer was almost gone. Ellen went over and helped Aunt Ellen get Bob ready to go back to school. Aunt Ellen made shirts and even shorts and did almost a professional job of it.

Bob Grew Handsome.

"I'd take a whack at trousers and coats, too," she told Ellen. "But Bob wouldn't hear to it. That Bob brother of yours is getting good looking. Bet he's grown a whole half head this summer and is he ever a sheik?"

Ellen giggled. It amused her to hear her school teacher aunt lapse into slang. "God's gift to high-school women," she supplemented. "He's 15 this month."

"And he wants to take a job on the side. He's big and strong, perfectly capable but your mother won't hear of it."

"I know. Mother says if a child handles his school work he's done just about all he can do. And she's right in a way," Ellen found herself defending her mother constantly these days, even to herself.

Aunt Ellen laid down her sewing to look Ellen squarely in the eye.

"I'm not so sure about that. It's all right if a family has plenty. But this family is just about on the rocks."

Mother Complained.

Ellen had felt it coming. Her mother had complained little of late. It was the calm before the storm. "What is it, Aunt Ellen? Things worse than usual of late?"

"It's the furniture bill," Aunt Ellen said, "the collector has just been hounding the life out of your mother. He says that if she does not make a payment they're going to back their truck right up to the door and take all the furniture away."

"Oh, but they wouldn't do that."

"Oh, but they would and they have a right to do it, too. Your mother hadn't any business buying that furniture. She knew when she signed up for it that there wasn't any way she could pay the installments—if you got married and your board money stopped coming in."

"I see. I wonder, Aunt Ellen—I just wonder how much it would take to make a payment, get a little breathing space——"

"Fifty dollars, anyway, dear, maybe more. But don't try getting it of Mike even if you know he could afford it. Because it's just good money thrown in after bad. There'll be another payment due and another and another.

"Better let the furniture company come and take the furniture now while they've got a chance to sell it again for something and get their money back. We hadn't any business buying it, anyhow."

But Mama had come into the room and overheard the last words of what Ellen had to say.

"No, we hadn't any business buying it," she said bitterly. "We hadn't any business trying to have nice things like other people have at all. All the business we have is just to sit around here waiting until we're old enough to die.

"Well, maybe you feel that way, Ellen Mallory, you're 70. You've got a right to feel that way. But I haven't. I'm young. I'm only 40—that's only half my life. God knows I want a little more happiness, a few more nice things the second half of my life than I had during the first half."

She Tells Mike.

Ellen pondered that statement on the way home. There had been a scene, of course, in which Mama had said a good many bitter things. And it had come to Ellen with a kind of shock that maybe Mama was right.

She was young, barely 40, and a handsome woman in spite of her graying hair. Mama had the right to have things. Mama had the right to demand happiness yet of life.

She tried to tell her thoughts to Mike that night.

Poor Mike. He had been badgered all day. A job with a drawing account is a much less nerve wracking job than the same sort of work when one is one's own boss and the drawing account should be spent in expanding the business rather than in paying the debts of an in-law or even contracting new ones for oneself.

"I can't let you have the $50, Ellen. I'm sorry," Mike said gravely. "This month is going to be hard—harder than ordinary. We've got to look after ourselves, dear.

Mike Was Persuasive.

"And you're right about what your mother said. She is young. She does have a good share of her life left. Too much of it left to lie down and pine. She needs to work—she needs to work herself out of her own difficulties."

"But how can she, Mike? Tell me that." Ellen moved away from his pleading arms. Somehow, in Mike's arms it was so easy to agree with every word he said.

Mike lighted a cigarette. His hand trembled a little. He had made a sudden, desperate decision.

"Ellen, there are a lot of things your mother could do to work herself out of her difficulties. Take a garden, for instance. There is wonderful garden ground just back of her house, lot after lot, fenced in. She never lifted her hand to make a garden.

"But look at my mother's garden. Why, Ellen, she's raised and canned this year almost more than the family can eat for the whole winter."

Ellen was not angry. She nodded in eager agreement. She admired Mike's mother immensely. "She taught me tricks I've never known. Next year I'm going to have a garden."

"Of course you will and I'll help you. But now, don't you see, Ellen, your mother could do the same thing. But she won't. She just won't. There is Bob to help her. Bob's a great big fellow now and he wants to help. Ellen, he's just been bored to death all summer because he hasn't had anything to do."

"I'll admit she could have made a garden," Ellen agreed, determined not to quarrel with Mike at any cost. "And Bob could have helped. But that isn't cash. How could she make these payments? She hasn't any cash."

"Why she could save it in food. Hard, I'll admit, but not impossible."

"Well, she hasn't," in desperation, "and now they're going to take the furniture. It will just kill mother if they do. Mike, I'm not asking you to give me the money. I know we can't afford it. But, Mike, I am asking you to let me go back to work. I can earn it and I can help mother out. It won't hurt me a bit."

Situation Was Worse.

Poor young Mike. The situation grew worse with every word he uttered. "But we had that all out before. You promised to give up your work and stay home. I've tried to provide for you. I've tried to get the things you wanted. Haven't I done it, Ellen?"

"Yes, Mike, but——"

"Then there isn't any more argument, Ellen. I'm sorry—we're both sorry for this other situation, but there isn't anything we can do about it. We've got to live our own lives."

"And you won't let me go back to work—even for a few weeks—to help my own mother?"

Poor Mike. He should have recognized the danger signals.

"Ellen, there isn't any use talking about it. You promised."

"Then I'm breaking my promise, Michael Dale. I'm breaking it. You or no other man can make me go back on my own mother. I'm going back to work tomorrow morning."

"If you do, Ellen—it's—well, it's all over with us."

"All right then—" as calmly as though her heart was not breaking that very minute. "Then it's all over with us." And that night she locked her door against her husband.

Children of 7 Held Too Old To Play Dolls

CHILDREN of 7 are too old to believe in Santa Claus, Easter bunnies or fairies or to play with dolls. Such are the deductions of a new maturity scale devised by psychologists at the Vineland (N. J.) Training School.

Dr. Edgar A. Doll, director of research at the school, recently explained the test at the sixth annual meeting of the Association of Consulting Psychologists at Columbia University. Under it children are asked questions scaled according to age, order and dealing with socially significant performances.

Dr. Doll said that if girls at 7 still played with dolls they were reverting to "lower behavior." However, he pointed out that a person of mature age often reverted to lower behavior when they needed mental let-downs.

"For instance," he said, "at this time of the year I often feel like going out and playing with tops."

County Spurns Plea It Control Heights Streets

Proposal Is Against Former Policies, Commissioners Explain.

Prince Georges County commissioners yesterday turned a deaf ear to a plea from citizens of District Heights, Md., who asked that the county assume control of the streets in that community.

"We feel that we are being taxed and are getting no direct benefit from certain road taxation and a few citizens have had the entire expense of keeping the roads in condition to travel over," wrote G. I. Hightower, president of the local citizens' association.

The commissioners explained that to assume the maintenance of the streets in this community would be against former policies followed by the board.

Another request was received from the Cheverly Citizens Association, asking that steps be taken to provide adequate police protection for that community. The board took this under advisement.

Road Improvement Asked.

Former State Senator Oliver Metzerott, in a letter to the commissioners, requested that Riggs road, between the junction of Riggs and Powder Mill roads and the Montgomery County line, be improved. This was referred to the State roads commission.

The commissioners also drew up a list of county roads they plan to suggest for improvement with funds to be received from the Federal Government. The list included:

The Townshen-Grimes Corner road, 8.8 miles; Sheriff road, 1.2 miles; T. Fusion Party's Record Scored In Montgomery

Has Boosted Pay Rolls by $3,000, Senator Prescott Tells Women.

The record of the Fusion Party since it assumed control in Montgomery County was attacked in an address by State Senator Stedman Prescott before the Democratic Women's Club of Chevy Chase, Md.

Instead of the economy they preached in the campaign, the Fusionists actually have added approximately $3,000 to the county pay rolls since election, the Senator declared. The only salaries reduced are those of girls making hardly enough to live on, he said.

Prescott pointed out that the Fusion leaders went to Gov. Harry W. Nice and asked him not to sign a bill introduced by Fusion Delegate Joseph A. Cantrel, which would "reduce the salary of Edward Peter, Fusion party boss." Six out of seven of the members of the Republican State central committee have been given jobs and practically everyone who was closely connected with the Fusion ticket has been given a job as well as members of their families, he said.

The State Senator declared the Fusionists had proffered as a campaign pledge the taking of the county police out of politics. Despite the almost unanimous demand of civic and business groups that experienced policemen be kept and the repeated promise that the force would not be reduced, the Police Department was reduced to six experienced policemen when Senator Prescott introduced the bill which returned 15 to the force, he declared. Te cited editorials in The Washington Post opposing reduction of the police force.

"Insteead of taking the police out of politics, they are collecting campaign funds from them," Prescott charged.

He produced a photostatic copy of a form which informed a county Fusion policeman that 15 per cent of his salary was to be collected from him to pay off the Fusion campaign deficit.

Prescott cited the county treasurer's office as an example of the greed for jobs of the Fusionists. He charged that despite the fact that J. Forest Walker, the treasurer, who is a Democrat, is charged with collecting and accounting for nearly $2,000,000 a year, every clerk in his office was dismissed, except two, in the midst of the tax sale.

He urged the women to begin their campaign for the next election now and promised to support them.

Virginians First to Seek Power Funds

$2,000,000 at Once or $7,000,000 Long-Terms Aid Sought.

By the Associated Press.

Virginia—In the words of a member of the State delegation—got in yesterday on the "ground floor" of the $100,000,000 Federal rural electrification program.

Gov. Peery submitted to Frank C. Walker, National Emergency Council director, the State's survey of rural electrification needs and asked, informally, for funds to finance it.

The conference, which was attended by Senator Byrd and Representative Burch, of Martinsville, and several State officials, was a preliminary to submission of the State's formal application. That application will go forward as soon as Walker's office works out the form and procedure for handling such requests.

First State Survey Submitted.

The Virginia group obviously was pleased when they were told by W. E. Herring, rural electrification engineer, that the Old Dominion survey was the first such Statewide study to be submitted to his office. Herring is an assistant to Morris Cooke, division director.

The survey, which Herring reviewed under guidance of Allan J. Saville, Richmond engineer who prepared it, calls for expenditure of $2,500,000 on a rural elictrification program to be carried out at once, or $7,000,000 for a more extensive seven-year program.

Walker was able to give the Virginians only a broad outline of what the Government plans to do with the $4,000,000,000 work relief fund.

As Burch understood the plan, the $4,000,000,000 will be divided roughly among the States with the number of persons on relief rolls as a primary factor in the basis of allotment.

Six Principles Guide Outlays.

When those allotments are made, the National set-up will work with the States to sub-allot this money to projects which come in status outlined by President Roosevelt.

The Chief Executive gave "six fundamental principles" for guidance in allocation of the money. They were:

1. The projects should be useful.
2. Projects shall be of a nature that a considerable proportion of the money spent will go to wages for labor.
3. Projects which promise ultimate return to the Federal Treasury of a considerable proportion of the costs will be sought.
4. Funds allotted for each project should be actually and promptly spent and not held over until later years.
5. In all cases projects must be of a character to give employment to those on relief rolls.
6. Projects will be allocated to localities or relief areas in relation to the number of workers on relief rolls.

Besides discussing eelctrification with the Virginians, Walker also urged Peery to prepare immediately a general Virginia works relief program, including worthy projects of all character.

John Galleher, State director of the National Emergency Council, sat in the conference. State officials who accompanied Peery were Lester Hooker, State corporation commissioner; Attorney General Abram P. Staples and Prof. C. W. Seitz, of the rural engineering department at Virginia Polytechnic Institute.

88,000-Gallon Liquor Hauls Bared at Trial

Witnesses Describe How They Outsped Officers in Franklin County.

By the Associated Press.

Roanoke, Va., May 7.—Three Government witnesses estimated during the twelfth day of the trial of 23 members of an alleged Franklin County liquor conspiracy here today that they hauled or helped "pilot" approximately 88,000 gallons of whisky out of Franklin County in recent years, and a fourth refused to estimate the quantity but recalled that he averaged about three loads of at least 100 gallons a week from 1927 to 1934—another 100,000.

One of the four, Columbus Argabright, of Baltimore, revealed that he was paid $50 for a trip with a load to West Virginia; $25 for a load to Lynchburg, and $20 a load to Roanoke.

Argabright said that county officers could not catch him in his powerful car, and the defense stressed the fact that he often was chased by Franklin County officers at Boone Mill, on the Rocky Mount-Roanoke road, but Argabright said he was never caught in Franklin County except once, when he was a "pilot" and was charged with interfering. The charge was nolle prossed because Argabright faced a Federal charge at the time.

The witness reminded Judge John Paul, sitting on the alleged conspiracy case, that Paul was the judge who sentenced him to Chillicothe, Ohio; that he was put on probation last June after serving a year, and that his period of probation will expire June 4.

Argabright explained that when he ran liquor for Claude Shively, one of 23 defendants to the indictment, he never was bothered by Franklin County officers, but he and Shively fell out after Argabright had testified against Shively in a liquor case in West Virginia.

Shenandoah Anticipates A Good Year

Farmers Hope for Fine Grain and Orchard Yields This Season.

Industrial Pay Rolls Up, Egg Price Boost Aids Poultrymen.

By C. B. Carr.
A Staff Correspondent.

Harrisonburg, Va., May 7.—The Shenandoah Valley of Virginia is in the midst of what generally appears to be its best business year since the days before the depression, according to farmers, merchants and tradesmen in general who answer the question "How's business?" with a quick statement of generally improved economic conditions.

Harrisonburg is regarded by many persons as being the center of the famed Shenandoah Valley. Coupled with this agricultural belt are numerous industries which, in normal times, are capable of taking care of all surplus labor and whose annual pay rolls run into six figures.

The Shenandoah Valley is noted for its wheat, apples, peaches and poultry. Not far behind these crops stand corn, the smaller fruits, some truck crops, oats and a multitude of other farm crops raised mostly for local consumption.

Wheat Crop Excellent.

Not far from Harrisonburg in Rockingham, Shenandoah and Augusta Counties is one of Virginia's largest wheat belts. This year the crop is in excellent condition. Farmers are anticipating yields from 20 to 35 bushels per acre and talk of "dollar wheat" has them all enthused over the prospects of reaping a sizable profit from their crop, as compared with heavy losses of a few years back.

Northward at Winchester and southward at Staunton and Charlottesville the blossom of the apple trees this year was one of the best in years. In fact the bloom was so large and the weather so favorable for the "set" of the blossom that Dr. Walter S. Hough, entomologist at the Winchester Research Laboratory, says indications are that the apple growers will have their best crop since 1928.

Expect Good Demand.

The fears of a few years past that a large apple crop would glut the market do not appear to be hovering over the fruit grower this season. They admit that much of the export outlet has been curtailed, but point out that the demand for apples on the part of by-product plants is expected to be the best in years.

Since the repeal of prohibition, the demand for apple cider and vingear has greatly increased, according to one by-product manufacturer, who states that distilleries are taking great quantities of cider and vinegar for use in making apple brandy. One apple brandy distillery now operates at Winchester and by-products plants at Winchester, Strasburg, Martinsburg, W. Va., sell millions of gallons of cider and vinegar to distilleries located in other States.

At Winchester, the Virginia Woolen Co. is operating a new addition to its plant with 150 more employes.

Pickle Factories.

At Harrisonburg, a new industry offers a new field for the farmer—a pickle factory. Farmers have been requested to raise millions of cucumbers to be pickled and a number of them are said to be under contract for the product already.

In addition to crops, poultry has been one of the big sources of income for citizens of the Valley. Right now, it is pointed out, an old hen or a young chicken is a decided asset—even though feed prices have advanced. A poultry farmer says that for the first time in years the price of eggs has been increasing from the last 30 days, while offers for broilers are the best in years.

Cattle, horses, sheep and hogs are also money-makers for the Valley farmers—at least for the present. Cattle prices are up nearly 100 per cent from a year ago; the farmer anticipates what he calls "good money" for lambs and wool this spring, and hogs are selling at the highest prices in years.

Value of Horses Grows.

Although tractors have been in use on a small scale in this section for years, the farmer has tenaciously clung to heavy horses for farm work. Almost overnight, these horses have doubled, trebled and in many cases quadrupled in value. One farmer pointed out today that a horse was sold the other day for $200 which two years ago would not have brought $50—and he claimed this was no exception.

Representative A. Willis Robertson, of Lexington, who represents this district in Congress, declares that his investigation shows that 80 per cent of the people of the Shenandoah Valley are dependent on farming for an existence. In a recent interview he stated that the excellent condition of the Valley was due in a large measure to the frugality and thriftiness of its people, adding that nowhere in the United States would one find a finer combination of nationalities—the "aristocratic cavaliers of Clarke and Frederick counties, the frugal Germans of Rockingham and the steadfast Scot-Irish of Augusta and Rockbridge counties."

High Wind Carries Man Into Shelter

By the Associated Press.

Baltimore, May 7.—W. A. Bouchau, jr., Baltimore florist, ran for shelter today as a sudden windstorm broke, and reached that shelter in rapid-fire time because the wind boosted him along.

Bouchau was planting flowers and when the storm started he ran for a cellar. The wind was so strong he grasped an iron fence post to keep from being swept off his feet.

But the wind picked up Bouchau, fence post and all, and deposited him through the open door of the cellar, to which he had started. He was not injured, but most of the glass in his greenhouse was broken.

Wheat Growers To Vote May 25 In Referendum

Frederick County Association Plans Meetings Prior to Balloting.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Frederick, Md., May 7.—Plans for a wheat referendum May 25 under the auspices of the Agricultural Adjustment authorities were made at a meeting of the Frederick County Wheat Control Association yesterday. Walter E. Burrall, New Market, chairman, presided and all of the 12 members were present. It was decided to hold meetings and explain the referendum as follows:

May 20, New Market, Mr. Burrall, chairman; Libertytown, Murray D. Nicodemus, chairman; Myersville, C. U. Stottlemyer, chairman; Lewistown, Allen M. Pitzer, chairman; Jefferson, Charles Hemp, chairman, and Middletown, George D. Derr, chairman. May 21, Urbana, Ronald E. Kling, chairman; Walkersville, Alvie M. Etzler, chairman; Frederick, Ernest C. Speaks, chairman; Thurmont, Frank A. Roddy, chairman; Adamstown, W. H. Renn, chairman, and Emmitsburg, Jones Baker, chairman.

Polling places in 25 election districts will be opened at school houses from 9 a. m. to 8 p. m. Members of community committees will act as election officials. The result of the voting in each district will be sent to the office of Henry R. Shoemaker, county agent, by noon May 27, and the same afternoon the wheat allotment committee will tabulate the returns and forward them to Dr. Thomas B. Symons, director of the extension service, University of Maryland, who will dispatch them to Washington.

All farmers who signed contracts under the present wheat program and all who were eligible to sign such contracts whether they have done so or not are entitled to vote on the question. The proposed future program would follow in general outlines the present program. It would be based upon voluntary contracts for four years, 1936, 1937, 1938 and 1939, with optional provision for continuing from year to year during this period. A referendum on the corn-hog program last fall resulted in 80 per cent of those who signed contracts the year before favoring the contracts for another year.

Benefit wheat payments to farmers in this county totaled $140,000 for 1933 and 1934. The rate of payment for 1935 has not been set.

17 Taken Ill, Relief Food Called Back

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Hagerstown, Md., May 7.—After illness of 17 persons in three families on the relief rolls here over the week-end, the Welfare Board acting upon advice of the Health Department, today ordered the recall of what remained of 2,000 cans of mutton distributed to families on relief here in April.

Dr. W. Ross Cameron, health officer, after investigating, said he suspected the mutton had caused what he described as food poisoning. Most of the patients are recovering he said.

E. B. Burns, State distributor of surplus commodities, who arrived here today, said that the local illness was the first reported in Maryland, where 86,400 cans of the mutton had been distributed to families on relief during April and that he believed most of it had been consumed by this time.

Burns said the mutton had been prepared by a reputable commercial house under Government supervision and the product had been approved by the Department of Agriculture. All counties in Maryland have received some of the mutton, he said.

Tests are being made by the State Health Department of the contents of some of the cans recalled. Burns said the Bureau of Animal Industry also would make tests. The analyses will require about a week.

In the meantime the Welfare Board warned families receiving the mutton not to eat any more and began collecting that which had not been used.

Dr. Cameron said that in each case the person affected became violently ill from 3 to 4 hours after eating the mutton, remaining ill several days.

Virginians Preparing For Menhaden Season

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Heathsville, Va., May 7.—Extensive preparation is being made for the menhaden fishing season, one of the Northern Neck's largest industries, which opens the last Monday in May and closes December 1. The industry employs 1,500 persons in the Northern Neck.

Reedville, in the lower end of Northumberland County, is the center of the fish scrap and fish oil manufacturing in this section. There are a dozen or more large fish scrap and oil plants in Northumberland and Lancaster counties which operate more than 30 fishing steamers. These steamers ply the waters of the Atlantic Ocean and Chesapeake Bay, "sight" the schools of fish, and surround them with "purse nets," sometimes catching as high as several houndred thousand at one "set."

The Treble Clef Club of Hagerstown, Md., one of the oldest musical organizations in western Maryland, has re-elected Mrs. A. H. Kreider president. Under Mrs. Kreider's regime last year the club sponsored the organization of a Junior Music Club which has presented several programs during the season. Other officers elected are Mrs. Crown O. Assisting in the preparation of exhibits is the Garden Club of Hagerstown which, with Mrs. Walter Baker in charge of arrangements, has planned to include a full scale garden as well as an arrangement of flowers surrounding a pool with ferns and evergreens used as a background.

The Virginia Federation of Women's Clubs began its annual meeting yesterday at Lexington, Va. The meeting, which is a State prelude to the national convention of Women's Club Federation at Detroit later, will select officers for the coming season.

Hagerstown will continue with its celebration of music week with a program offered by the students of the Imperial Institute of Violin under the direction of Kenneth Stewart in the afternoon and another by piano pupils of Regina Felgly in the evening.

Plans for a memorial service under the auspices of the Frederick County (Md.) Volunteer Firemen's Association were discussed at a meeting of the presidents of the various companies last night. Tentative plans were to hold the ceremony in the new amphitheater in Baker Park. Attending the meeting were Lewis R. Bertzbaugh, Dr. A. Atlee Radcliff, W. Bartgis Storm, William W. Storm, S. T. Virts, Albert Y. Boileau, Charles F. Mort, Jesse I. Renner, Walter Faulkenstein, L. C. Mackley and Kent C. Nicodemus.

Fruit Growers Asked to Fight Eastman Bill

Legislation Called Unfavorable to Virginia Orchardists.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Winchester, Va., May 7.—An appeal to Frederick County fruit growers to take a definite stand against the passage by Congress of the Eastman transportation bill was made today by Phil H. Gold, president of the Frederick County Fruit Growers' Association, who has received a communication from F. S. Canfield, of Staunton, giving the reasons the proposed legislation is considered unfavorable to ochardists.

It was pointed out that the bill provides for motor transportation to be under the direction of the Interstate Commerce Commission, giving the commission power to regulate motor trucks, to require each truck operator to secure Federal license upon a showing of public necessity and convenience, and also would give the commission power to fix not only interstate rates but intrastate rates when, in the opinion of the commission, those rates would affect interstate rates.

An enormous national highway police system would be necessary for enforcement, it was held.

The prospects of a large crop of apples, it was held, makes it imperative that growers act at once to "keep every available outlet open." The producers were urged to get in communication with members of Congress in an effort to win their support against the measure.

Official Quits, Quesenberry's Trial Held Up

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Leesburg, Va., May 7.—The case of the Commonwealth vs. (Old Tom) Quesenberry, charged with murder in the death of Corpl. C. J. McClary, of Alexandria, has been continued until the June term of court by direction of Judge J. R. H. Alexander of the Loudoun County Circuit Court.

The order followed the designation today of John Galleher as Commonwealth's attorney for Loudoun County to accept the position of national emergency council director of Virginia.

Stilson H. Hall and Lucas D. Phillips, defense attorneys, introduced no arguments to quash the recent indictment of Quesenberry. The first indictment was quashed April 29 on the ground the grand jurors had been chosen illegally. Quesenberry was then reindicted by a grand jury called from bystanders in the courtroom. The court set today to hear arguments on the last indictment.

Quesenberry was captured March 17, after an extensive man hunt by Federal, State and local officers.

Nice and Greenstein Call Situation Critical, Spurring Action.

By the Associated Press.

Baltimore, May 7.—A last appeal to the Federal Government for additional relief funds for Maryland was planned today by the Board of State Aid and Charities.

It was hoped a conference could be arranged in Washington Thursday.

Senator Radcliffe was asked to arrange the conference after the board met yesterday and heard Gov. Nice and State Relief Administrator Harry Greenstein term the situation critical.

The Governor said he would attend the conference with Senators Radcliffe and Tydings and Greenstein.

Relief officials maintained there was little hope of carrying on activities beyond the middle of the month with the $900,000 allotted for general purposes in May.

At the same time that a 65 per cent reduction in the relief rolls of Baltimore County was announced by the County Board of Welfare, State relief officials said that unless this month's allotment is augmented, sharp cuts in Baltimore and the counties may be necessary.

Meanwhile, the People's Unemployment League of Maryland sent the Board of State Aid and Charities a telegram asserting "Baltimore is starving the unemployed" and urging a special session of the Legislature be called to meet the "relief crisis."

The board previously had refused an audience to a delegation including Frank Trager, league chairman; Dr. Naomi Riches and James Blackwell, public relations officer.

Advisory Council Studies Reforms

By the Associated Press.

Richmond, Va., May 7.—Members of the criminal procedure subcommittee of the Governor's advisory council, headed by Delegate Ashton Dovell, considered reform proposals in a meeting here today and announced another public hearing for June 6.

The public was invited to submit suggested changes through William R. Shands, secretary to the council, or in person at the June 6 hearing.

Points considered today included requirement of notice of use of alibi witnesses or entering of an insanity plea by the defendant; possible changes incident to service of Negroes on juries; joint trial of persons jointly indicted unless the court orders otherwise; alternate jurors to prevent mistrials by illness of a juror; extradition of witnesses in criminal trials.

"Naughty Marietta" Lends Added Impetus to National Music Week in Capital

Takes Rank as Cultural Work Of High Order

Proves Fine Music Ageless; Variety's Mothers' Day; News of Theaters.

By Nelson B. Bell.

It was probably more a display of alert showmanship than any mere coincidence that the presentation of the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer picturization of Victor Herbert's "Naughty Marietta" and the observance of National Music Week are items of concurrent interest.

There may or may not have been a similarly acute foresightedness in the producers' determination to make a picture of "Naughty Marietta" in the year of the twenty-fifth anniversary of its first presentation on the living stage—back in an era when the motion picture had not as yet seriously begun the momentous business of emerging from the nickelodeon type of entertainment, and any picture that ran longer than three reels was a colossus.

I was charmed more than once—several times in one week here, as a matter of fact, with glimpses of the piece in other cities and return engagements added—by the voices of Emma Trentini and Orville Harrold in the roles now sung on the screen at Loew's Fox by Jeanette MacDonald and Nelson Eddy. There could be no greater contrast than between Trentini and MacDonald.

Dubbed "The Peanut."

When she was a "soubrette" in the Metropolitan Grand Opera company, an assignment which Fritzi Scheff, who distinguished herself in Herbert's "Mlle. Modiste," also occupied at one time, the tiny and irrepressible Trentini was jocularly dubbed "The Peanut" by the late Enrico Caruso. She was a diminutive little firecracker with a voice out of all proportion to the meager dimensions of her physical endowments.

Between Harrold and Eddy there was not so much difference, except that Mr. Eddy is by far the better looking and in age and temperament seems to fit the role of Capt. Richard Warrington a little better than the robust Mr. Harrold did.

Without the advantages of present-day mechanical recording for the films and the electrifying effects of judicious amplification, I am not at all sure that the present principals would not run second to the originals who sang the roles without any of these scientific aids and still made them magnificent and memorable down the years.

Which Was Greatest?

The results of a public poll as to which actually is the score to be looked upon as Victor Herbert's masterpiece in the field of operetta would be interesting.

It seems to me it probably would be between "Naughty Marietta" and "Mlle. Modiste," but Herbert was such a prolific composer and possessed such a sure command of both melody and orchestration that many other candidates must needs come to the fore—"The Fortune Teller," with its imperishable "Little Gypsy Sweetheart" number; "The Serenade," "Babes in Toyland," "Sweethearts" and an infinite catalogue of others that might be set down scoring for the purposes of this discussion of his Indian grand opera, "Natoma."

Not to see and hear "Naughty Marietta" is to miss the finest musical effort the screen has made to date. It is a genuine compliment to National Music Week and should do much to advance the cause of good music in the cinema, just as "One Night of Love" did with its deft utilization of the popular arias from grand opera, sung by voices capable of doing them justice.

George Bernard Shaw, whose "Candida" has been brought to new rekindled importance and popularity as one of the plays in Katharine Cornell's season of repertoire closing this Saturday night, has written a new drama, "The Millionairess," a play about a "female Cecil Rhodes." Shaw is said to have described it in these words: "It has no moral, it teaches you nothing and has no long speeches, none that lasts more than ten minutes." The venerable Mr. Shaw now is in South Africa, which seems a safe distance from which to issue such a statement!

Broadway Looks Ahead.

At the tag-end of the theatrical season, with the Pulitzer Prize already awarded—"The Old Maid" received it last night—and the shouting and tumult about to die, dyed-in-the-wool New York theater-lovers are beginning to cast their eyes toward next season and almost without exception see as the production of greatest prospective interest the Theater Guild's presentation of a musical version of its tremendously successful "Porgy." Dorothy and DuBose Heyward's tense dramatization of Negro life in Catfish Row, Charleston, S. C.

George Gershwin has been at work on the score for months and still is busy with his second act orchestration—a new type of undertaking for him. DuBose Heyward wrote the libretto and, in collaboration with Ira Gershwin, also is taking a hand in the lyrics.

Rouben Mamoulian, who directed the original, will abandon Hollywood, for the nonce, and likewise direct the play in its new form.

A "find" is announced for the title role—in which it was rather expected that Paul Robeson would be heard—in the person of Todd Duncan, bass-barytone, teacher of music at Howard University in this city and whilom concert singer.

Washingtonian "Discovered."

Here is a voice that George Gershwin "discovered" and immediately brought to the attention of the Guild executives for purposes of an audition. The directors were impressed—Theresa Helburn, Lawrence Langner, Lee Simonson, Philip Moeller, Helen Westley and the rest for as many of them as were in the East)—and had the Duncan signature on a contract before he could escape from the room. This document, incidentally, is reported to contain a shrewd clause against the loss of a year's teaching salary in case the production doesn't endure as is expected.

Choir drills will be held under the direction of Eva Jessye for two months before "Porgy" goes into rehearsal on August 17. The musical "Porgy" will open in Boston early in October and then proceed to Broadway, probably to some playhouse of more ample size than the Guild Theater. The production will boast a sprawling cast, choir, and a pit orchestra of 43 musicians.

That, at least, should provide volume, if not value, and I have yet to hear a George Gershwin composition that omitted the latter item.

With casting practically completed, the Pierce Hall Players have plunged into rehearsals of "The Ghost Train," the grisly thriller by Arnold Ridley, which will be presented on May 22 and 23 in Pierce Hall, Fifteenth and Harvard streets, under the direction of George Farrington. Until recently, Mr. Farrington was associated with Prof. Frederick Koch, at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill.

The cast includes Eleanor Cox Karsten, Howard Wentworth, Chester Ring, Dorine Calcote, James Gates, Yerby Pannill, Frank Jamison, Felice Lloyd, Frank Gaunt and Charles Bell. Ken Romney and his staff, recently with the Roadside Theater, have charge of the elaborate sound effects demanded by the production. This will be the last Pierce Hall production of the season.

Variety Club Pays Homage.

Hundreds of wives and mothers of members of the Variety Club of Washington, a comparatively newly formed theatrical social and charitable organization, were guests at the Mother's Day luncheon in the grand ballroom of the Willard yesterday, when Carter Barron, division manager for Loew's, Inc., and Harry E. Lohmeyer, manager of the Earle Theater, were "kings for the day."

Rabbi Abram Simon, one of the chaplains, pronounced the invocation, and Father Francis Cartwright, another chaplain, spoke briefly on the topic of "Mother."

The Hon. Charles Curtis, former Vice President of the United States, was a guest of honor.

Artists and an Auto.

Entertainment was furnished by Dave Apollon, Harold Aloma and Luba Malina, from the stage bill at Loew's Fox, and Herb Cook and His Three Little Words, from the Earle. Arthur Reilly concluded the program with a short poem, with Bert Granoff singing "Mother Machree."

A feature of the luncheon was the drawing for the winner of the Studebaker automobile, given away by the club. From a huge container, ten stubs were drawn by Mrs. W. J. E. Brown. From this number, three were drawn by Mrs. J. Small and from these, Mrs. Helen Brylawski, the oldest mother present, drew the winner.

The winner turned up in the person of A. Ney, of Woodley Park Towers—much to the good-natured chagrin of all the other potential winners who packed the ballroom.

"Speaking of South Bend, Ind., as we were no longer ago than yesterday, that was the birthplace of Charles Butterworth, whose shadow is coming to town Friday in "Baby Face Harrington," a new screen comedy, co-featuring Una Merkel. He studied law at Notre Dame, on the outskirts of town; became a newspaper man, for a while was J. P. McAvoy's private secretary, went into vaudeville, arrived in musical comedy, and now look at him!

Honest Confession Note.

With all my gallumphing in and around South Bend in an earlier incarnation honesty compels the admission that I can not point back with pride and brag that I "knew him when."

Maybe he wasn't there "when," although he was born in South Bend on July 26.

All he leaves it for you to do is try and find out what year!

Miss Lee's New Spring Silhouette

Ace Comedy Is Smart Vehicle For Nationals

'Petticoat Fever' Affords Hilarious Evening as Done by Players.

By Nelson B. Bell.

"PETTICOAT FEVER." S. E. Cochran presents the National Theater Players in a new farce in three acts by Mark Reed. Directed by Karl Nielsen; single setting by Charles Squire.

THE CAST:

Dascom Dinsmore.....Roy Roberts
Kimo.....Warren Parker
Sir James Fenton.....Raymond Bramley
Ethel Campion.....Nancy Sheridan
Little Seal.....Edwina Wise
Snow Bird.....Eleanor Campsall
Rev. Arthur Shapham.....Forrest Orr
Capt. George Landry.....Arthur Young
Scotty.....George Taylor
Clara Wilson.....Ruth Lee

The ardent romanticisms that can be engendered in an imaginative young radio operator, hungry for feminine companionship after two years of icy isolation on a snow-bound coast of Arctic Labrador, are made the basis of this racy, rollicking and slightly risque farce, presented as the second bill of the National Theater Players.

"Petticoat Fever" was to have been played here some three months ago by Dennis King and the original company, still a hit in the Ritz Theater in New York, on its way from a Chicago run to Broadway, but Washington, at the last moment, was deleted from the comedy's transient itinerary. It was deemed a serious loss at the time, but it need not be looked upon in that light now, for the National Theater Players interpret the three breezy acts contrived by Mark Reed with a zest, a complete grasp of the humorous possibilities of both lines and action and a fast-moving, exhilarating tempo that even Mr. King and his associates would find it difficult to surpass.

Played in High Key.

This spirit, verve and spontaneity are due principally to the high-power playing of Roy Roberts as the radio operator, Dascom Dinsmore; the ingenuous emotionalism of Nancy Sheridan and the overpowering vivacity of Ruth Lee. They lend the action a velocity and a comic impetuosity that make the play.

There are, of course, the more deliberate roles that lend effective contrast to the high-tension impersonations of those primarily concerned in the comedy's marital complications. These are played by Raymond Bramley, as the wealthy Canadian sportsman and politician, with a town house in London, a neat little yacht and divers and sundry other opulent possessions; Forrest Orr, as the Labradorian Rev. Arthur Shapman, "Shappie," who likes his "tea" straight, and J. Arthur Young, who appears briefly as Capt. George Landry, who brings a boatload of matrimonial complications to the bleak outpost.

Warren Parker makes an auspicious debut as the company's new juvenile in the character part of Kimo, a young Eskimo servitor—which he plays with a rich understanding of its values—and Edwina Wise, paired with Eleanor Campsall, also makes her first appearance in a mere "bit" as one of the two native girls who decamp temporarily from "Shappie's" mission for the gayer atmosphere of Dinsy's radio station.

Hilarity in the Icepacks.

That all of this may approximate some semblance of comprehensible narrative in the mind of the reader, if any, it should be said that an airplane, far off its course, drops Sir James Fenton and his fiancee, Ethel Campion (Nancy Sheridan) into a hospitable and soft snowdrift almost at the radio station's door. Mr. Dinsmore, after two years of social ostracism, is as precipitate a wooer as John B. Litel makes "Dizzy" Davis in "Ceiling Zero." That will give you a rough idea of the discomfiture to which Sir James is put after sudden low temperatures freeze them in.

Finally, in comes Capt. Landry and Clara Wilson (Ruth Lee), the girl who hasn't given Dinsmore a thought for two years, until his rich uncle of the peerage dies in London and leaves him a fortune. And then it happens!

Although it slows down a trifle in the second act—or seems to because the first has moved with such celerity—"Petticoat Fever" is an A-1 farce, splendidly played, excellently directed and made realistic by Charles Squire's one finely executed setting.

It is unreservedly recommended as sagacious, seasonable and swift entertainment.

Watching Them Make Pictures

FRED ASTAIRE is doing the "Top Hat" number for his next flicker, "Top Hat." Astaire and 24 young men are attired in top hats, white ties and tails, as they sing about it and dance on a large platform made of a special birch—the better to pick up Astaire's taps.

They are giving Astaire every chance to progress with each succeeding picture. His dancing feet can't stand on their last success. There is a microphone loitering near the camera to record the taps. It is a new mike. The special invention of Hugh McDowell, jr., of the radio sound department, and it is being used for the first time on this set. It would take many long technical sentences to explain this new mike in detail. But what I learned from Mr. McDowell's explanation is that this mike separates melody from rhythm and since Astaire's tap dancing is strictly the beating of a tempo, this mike merely records the tap dance. Despite the fact that he is singing and a band is playing, these noises will have to be recorded separately and then blended. Later, it is all a little technical, but very important, I assure you—and myself. The technical end is a phase of pictures we don't appreciate enough.

• • • •

Merely from watching Mr. Astaire and the boys, one can see that "Top Hat" has class. It has the same class distinction as a musical number in "The Bandwagon" or "As Thousands Cheer" . . . Irving Berlin is again on the set watching Astaire and Director Mark Sandrich work. After several takes of singing and dancing to "Top Hat," Berlin shouts out: "That's a swell one, keep that one." Director Sandrich smiles at Berlin.

• • • •

MARION DAVIES comes onto the set of "Page Miss Glory!" Director Mervyn Leroy summons the players: Pat O'Brien, Frank McHugh, Mary Astor, Lyle Talbot and the group of extras. The scene is the hotel apartment in which Frank McHugh introduces Dawn Glory to the press and photographers.

"Let's run through the scene as we rehearsed it," says Director Leroy. Miss Davies stands next to Director Leroy; the understudy, Vera Burnett, is now to play Marion Davies' role of Dawn Glory. "I want you to watch," explains Director Leroy to Miss Davies, "so you can see the grouping I have arranged and you'll know what position to take to place the scene." The players run through the scene.

Director Leroy is a fine guide, he explains every motion, every gesture as he takes Miss Davies on this tour. Marion Davies, now fully understanding, goes in to play the scene. Director Leroy, perched on his high stand, laughs and shouts, as the players do.

• • • •

"The Big Broadcast" has finally gone into actual production. This day, Lyda Roberti, Jack Oakie and Henry Wadsworth are playing a brief sequence in a broadcasting office for Director Norman Taurog. Miss Roberti, gay and snappy before the camera, is an ill girl. She has a trained nurse with her at all times. Jack Oakie isn't feeling any too good himself. Oakie takes a different pill every hour. He is trying to keep from putting on weight. In this sequence, Roberti has one line to say; "Oh, that marvelous voice," but with her dialect, Lyda says it: "O, dat marvelour worse." . . . Anyway, by the time they finish playing this scene, Oakie is speaking with a heavier Polish accent than Roberti.

• • • •

ANOTHER big musical which finally took off and got under way is "The Broadway Melody." Before a camera started turning on this one, it has cost Metro almost as much as the production of the first edition of "The Broadway Melody." This set is huge and the penthouse and garden of June Knight, who is, of course, giving a party. Scattered about the set are Dave Gould's beauty chorus waiting to strut their stuff. At present everyone is concerned with the set. Executives and visitors keep coming to gape. The majority of objects on the set are controlled by electricity. You press a button and a piano floats into view; press another button and a fully equipped bar jumps before you; another button and the huge flowing fountain sinks away and becomes a dance. Yes, sir, you're going to see girls dancing in mid-air. All the tricks have been built into the set this time, and trick photography will not be employed.

W. C. Fields again and now the name of the flicker is "Everything Happens at Once." Fields is always interesting to watch. Now, attired in a dressing gown, he is sitting—standing in one of those special ironing-board chairs which the actresses stand to rest in so their gowns won't wrinkle. Fields is discussing a comedy scene before playing it with Sam Hardy. Hardy has the reputation of being the loudest dresser in Hollywood, which makes him the undisputed champion of the world. The palest color Hardy ever wears is a gaudy red. At present, Hardy is attired in a lawn green color suit and appears rather subdued. It seems that the man in the sound booth objected to the loudness of Hardy's suits.

The acquisition of the Cumberland plant by Republic is expected to result in increased production here. It was reported that four mills and a motor, purchased by the local company, will be removed here from a closed plant in the Middle West.

Plans have been completed to place the large and small mills at the plant under one roof. At present, four mills are on one side and three on another. In the last three years, four mills have been in operation with three shifts.

Court Upsets Carroll County License Rules

Imposition of Certain Fees Held Discriminatory and Unreasonable.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Westminster, Md., May 7.—A decision which may effect changes in the ordinances of towns throughout Carroll County was handed down by Chief Judge Francis Neal Parke in the Carroll County Circuit Court yesterday, when he held that certain license ordinances of Westminster were invalid.

The decision followed the arrest of Walter Bidle, jr., driver for the Sun Oil Co., and Clyde G. Becker, driver for the Rice Baking Co. Bidle was charged with violating a local ordinance providing that a wholesaler, delivering and selling to retailers, must first procure a license.

Becker was charged with selling bread in Westminster without taking out a license. When the cases were tried before Police Magistrate George E. Benson, Bidle was found guilty and Becker was cleared. Appeals from the magistrate's decision were entered in both cases.

Judge Parke reversed the decision of the magistrate's court in Bidle's case yesterday on the grounds that the local ordinance under which he was charged was invalid because of discrimination and because the license fees imposed were unreasonable. The ordinance imposed from $10 to $125, depending upon the residence of the person taking out the license.

The appeal of the Mayor and common council in the second case was dismissed by Judge Parke, who held the ordinance affecting wholesalers was invalid on constitutional grounds, because it was discriminatory in exempting farm produce sold at wholesale, providing the farm produce was raised in Carroll County by the wholesaler, and because a daily license fee of $1 imposed where a wholesaler did not want an annual license was unreasonable.

Tax Exemption Sought In Reorganizing Firm

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Cumberland, Md., May 7.—A delegation of citizens yesterday appeared before the Mayor and city council and asked that the Kelly-Springfield Tire Co., in the process of reorganization under receivership, be exempted from taxation for ten years. Thomas B. Finan, trustee, declared that concession might result in saving the industry for the city, toward the establishment of which citizens contributed $750,000 a few years ago.

Mr. Finan said the truestees have obtained an interested purchaser, the concern being financially sound, but the final sale hinges considerably upon any concessions the trustees may obtain in the way of tax exemptions. The present tax exemption terminates in 1940.

(in a special advertisement yesterday) that all Washington will be unanimous in its praise of . . .
'The INFORMER'
(From the Novel of the Irish Rebellion, by Liam O'Flaherty)
BUT NOW the dramatic critics of the five great Washington newspapers, following a private preview yesterday, support us in that prediction . . .
Read for yourself:
what NELSON B. BELL, dramatic critic of your own favorite newspaper, says:
"The Informer" is a picture unique in conception and without blemish in execution. Based on that divine supplication, "Forgive them, Father, for they know not what they do," and with its action set during the hours of a single night in the foggy, dim-lit streets and homes of Dublin in 1922, it relates a deeply moving, exciting and, at times, humorous story of turbulent days in Ireland—and, beyond any picture in which he ever heretofore has appeared, it reveals Victor McLaglen as an actor of intelligence, versatility and power. It is a picture that should be seen. I certainly shall see it many times more.

This Morning . . .

With Shirley Povich

St. Louis, May 7.

AMID the acclaim with which fight fans are greeting the progress of the Negro, Joe Lewis, toward the heavyweight championship of the world, "Li'l Arthur" raises a more than mildly dissenting voice. "Li'l Arthur," you know, is Jack Johnson, who should know whereof he speaks when he speaks of fights and fighters.

POVICH.

The man who first interrupted Nordic supremacy in the prize ring when he knocked out Jim Jeffries that July 4 afternoon in Reno 25 years ago is here in St. Louis, sojourning with friends until he is able to map out for himself another schedule of exhibition bouts which are now paying his way through life.

At 57 "Li'l Arthur" is still an athletic-looking specimen except for the slight bulge at the waistline that betrays him. And after 20 years in the prize ring he's still as unmarked as on the day he first stepped through the ropes. He must have been clever. No sign of a cauliflower ear or a cut lip, and he says proudly that he never had a nose bleed in his life.

He doesn't think Louis will get by the Primo Carnera bout next month, and if, perchance, the young Detroit Negro does, there's Max Baer who will belt him out in a few rounds, Johnson opines. He tells you why, with gestures.

"I AM not wild about Louis. He's not in a class with other great Negro fighters like Joe Gans or Joe Walcott," says Johnson. "I've seen him in several of his fights, naturally, because I'm always interested in Negro fighters, but Louis has no action. He is a slow, plodding counter-puncher and he's been taught the fundamentals wrong.

"Now look: Here's the way a boxer should stand: Upright, left foot pointed toward his opponent, left hand extended. Now, when he shoots a left hook, the weight of his body follows. If he misses, the blow follows the line of the foot and doesn't go far, and he's ready again.

"But Louis turns his left foot in. He shoots a left hook and when he misses he is off balance, and a good boxer should make him miss. Although Carnera is no great fighter, he has a fairly good left, and his experience should be too much for Louis. Louis has not been taught to shoot a straight right hand and I'm surprised. Jack Blackburn, who is training Louis, was a fine fighter himself, but I don't like the way he's been teaching the boy fundamentals."

Personally, I'm surprised at what "Li'l Arthur" had to say. With all due respect to him and his record in the prize ring, I don't like that crack he made about a fighter must stand upright. One man I know, Jack Dempsey, by name, stood about as upright as a wilted collar and yet he did pretty well. He could hit, too, if memory serves, although I only know what I saw.

JOHNSON didn't disappoint me. He went on to say, as most old-timers do, that there are few good boxers today; that you don't see men who know how to block and parry punches as they should; that they are right-hand crazy, and that it's small wonder that most of 'em are walking on rounded heels from punch-drunkenness.

The greatest boxer he ever saw, he said, was Jim Corbett; the most accurate hitter, Bob Fitzsimmons, but for all-'round proficiency in the prize ring he named one of his own race, Midget Joe Walcott, the stumpy light-heavyweight who barred none in his day. Max Baer he likes, but says a man like Fitzsimmons would "take" him without any trouble, because nobody as wide open to the body as Baer would last more than a round against Fitz's solar plexus punches.

"Li'l Arthur" says he knows what's wrong with the boxing game nowadays, too. It's plenty, he says. Boxers don't train right and few referees know how to handle fights. The minute two fighters get close together the referee breaks 'em and the result is six rounds of stalling in ten. He says let 'em hit as long as they have one hand free, which is the premise on which Harry Wills was never recognized as a great fighter.

"Li'l Arthur" doesn't include Dempsey among the great hitters of the prize ring, that is, contrasted to the likes of Fitzsimmons and Peter Maher. Johnson didn't like Dempsey's habit of wearing the opposition down with a series of blows. He says when Maher or Fitzsimmons hit 'em once they stayed hit. There wasn't any of this hitting a man, knocking him down, watching him get up, and knocking 'em down again. He means they stayed hit.

Kentucky Derby a Good Show, But Not Good Enough—Gallico

By Paul Gallico,

A Special Correspondent.

NEW YORK, May 7.—This department, much to its surprise, was pleasantly and courteously received and treated at the Kentucky Derby. There was a room at the hotel, tickets to the track and mint and bourbon in the juleps.

Last year I made public complaint that I had been served Scotch whisky and sassasfras leaves in a Kentucky mint julep, and the chamber of commerce took it up immediately. Editorials were printed in the leading journals, condemning me (I also criticized the service, the arrangements and the general confusion in the town of Louisville, which I referred to as Looneyville on the Ohoho) and one of them went so far as to extend public sympathy to my bride for being shackled to such an obvious cross-patch and no-good.

This was really the only thing I resented, as up to the time of publication of this editorial the lady seemed to be reasonably contented. I was warned not to return to Louisville. It was intimated that I had shamefully traduced Southern hospitality, a line I did not quite understand since I paid for everything that I got with the exception of the working press ticket.

The service and the food were vastly improved this year. The hotel where I stopped didn't gouge me on the room rent, and the taxicabs charged a fair rate of 75 cents per person to and from the track, unless you wished to reserve the cab for yourself for the afternoon. But the jam and the turmoil at the end of the race is indescribable.

At 8:15 o'clock the cabs were still making trips back to Churchill Downs to pick up and bring back stranded spectators. It is hard to understand why the town wont take the trouble to do two things which are simple enough and which might make it a pleasure to attend the Derby instead of a chore and something to dread. One is to regulate the traffic to and from the race track, and the other is to set the post time of the big race for four o'clock in the afternoon or even a little earlier. The Derby is a great National sport event, but they treat it as just another hoss race.

I will never know why they don't build a Derby paddock in the infield in full view of all the grand stands, so that they can go through all of the exciting preliminaries, the saddling and the weighing of the jockies and the mounting in full view of the huge crowd.

It seems to me that they could run preliminary races from 1 to 3 p. m., then stop all activity to give the crowd an hour to bet, prepare the Derby horses in the infield paddock, build up the big race and send the ponies to the post at 4 o'clock.

The Derby is a good show now, but it isn't good enough.

Tigers Top A's, 5-3, For Fifth Straight

By the Associated Press.

Detroit, May 7.—Swinging into action again after a three-day enforced layoff due to rain, the Detroit Tigers let loose with a barrage of 12 hits today as they defeated the Philadelphia Athletics, 5 to 3, for their fifth straight victory.

While the American League champions were getting to Merritt Cain for eight of their hits and four of their runs in the first five innings and Johnny Marcum for the remainder in the remaining three frames, Tommy Bridges set the Athletics down with five hits. One of the latter was a fluke home run by Wally Moses in the eighth.

Five Hurlers Pounded in Assault

St. Louis Drops Ninth in Row as Whitehill Goes Route.

By Shirley L. Povich.

A Staff Correspondent.

ST. LOUIS, May 7.—The Browns continued the evil tenor of their ways this afternoon and accumulated their ninth straight defeat. The last time they won a ball game, old inhabitants say, was April 22.

It was a collision between the eight-game losing streak of the Browns and the two-game losing streak of the Nats before a mob of approximately 102 fans, and there was never much doubt as to which would survive. The Nats won the ball game by the score of 7 to 3.

Five St. Louis pitchers were guilty parties to the proceedings that saw the Nats collect 13 hits. Manager Rogers Hornsby also used three pinch hitters in an effort to halt the rout, but Earl Whitehill never permitted more than one run per inning.

Myer, Stone Star.

The chief culprits, from the St. Louis viewpoint, were Buddy Myer and Johnny Stone, who enjoyed large afternoons at bat. Each of 'em collected four hits. Myer's came consecutively and he wound up the day with a flourish by socking a home run onto the top of the right field stands with Whitehill on base. The best that Stone could do was a double, triple and two singles.

Buck Newsom, the big, talkative right-hander, who was seeking his first victory of the season as he took the mound at the start of the game, is still seeking it. The Nats shook him loose from two runs in the first inning and were in the midst of a three-run assault in the third when Hornsby decided that Newsom was ineffective.

Then the parade of Brown pitchers really got under way. Before it was all over, Dick Coffman had relieved Newsom, Elton Walkup had relieved Coffman, Fay Thomas had relieved Walkup, Paul Andrews had relieved Thomas and the Nats had relieved the Browns of the ball game.

Whitehill Quells Threat.

The Browns, shut out by Whitehill for four innings, began to reduce the Nats' 7 to 1 lead at the rate of one run per inning in the late sessions and there was some doubt if Whitehill would be present at the finish, but with the bases full in the eighth, he struck out Grube to quell the last St. Louis threat.

Before the inning was over, Sammy West cheated the Nats of three more runs when he climbed against the centerfield wall to pull down Joe Kuhel's tremendous fly at a

Golfer Duplicates Ace 20 Years Later

By the Associated Press.

Mount Vernon, N. Y., May 7.—It took W. H. Stewart 20 years to duplicate a golfing feat.

Using a mashie, he dropped the ball 150 yards into the cup on the sixth at the Siwanoy Country Club yesterday while playing in a three-some.

Then the caddy master reminded the modest Mr. Stewart that 20 years ago he had made the very same hole in one.

Rip Radcliff Outstanding In Attack

Rookie Hits 2 Doubles; Victory Chicago's 9th in Row at Home.

By the Associated Press.

CHICAGO, May 7.—The rampaging White Sox kept intact their perfect home record today when they turned back the New York Yankees, 4 to 3, in the belated opener of their series to increase their newly acquired lead in the American League to one and one-half games over the idle Cleveland Indians. The victory was the Sox's ninth successive triumph at home and their twelfth in 16 games.

With Rip Radcliff, freshman left fielder, leading the attack with a pair of consecutive doubles, the surprising Chicagoans jumped on Lefty Gomez for seven of their ten hits and all of their runs in the first two innings. The defeat was the Yankees' southpaw ace's third of the season.

Lazzeri Hits Homer.

Ted Lyons, veteran right-hander who was touched for seven hits, kept the Yanks curbed with one run until Tony Lazzeri hit a homer with Lou Gehrig on base in the eighth. He survived the rally, however, for his second victory of the year.

Three hits, including doubles by Radcliff and Al Simmons, produced the first Chicago run. Then Gomez walked Luke Appling to load the bases and followed by also giving Manager Jimmy Dykes a free ticket, forcing in the second tally of the first inning. In the second Radcliff again doubled and Hayes Bonura and Washington followed with singles to tally the league leaders' other two runs.

Yanks Get Score.

A base on balls, Appling's fumble of Gomez's grounder and Hill's single gave the Yanks their first run in the sixth. That was all until Lazzeri hit his homer in the eighth. Gomez was lifted for a pinch hitter in the seventh and Pat Malone finished on the mound, holding the Sox hitless.

Cubs, Not Giants, Toughest In League, Says Dizzy Dean

By Edward J. Neil,

Associated Press Sports Writer.

NEW YORK, May 7.—Well, sir, J. Herman (Dizzy) Dean has things all figured out so that the New York Giants can't possibly win the National League pennant and the St. Louis Cardinals can't possibly lose.

"It's this way," announced a very calm, reserved, statistical pitching expert, as rain drummed down on New York's byways. "We've got the best club in baseball. We're the world champions. We'll win close to 100 games this year. The Giants won't. That makes it."

As a matter of fact, J. Herman, who with Brother Daffy was absolutely poison to the Giants last year, losing but two games between them to the New Yorkers all season, thinks the Chicago Cubs are the most dangerous bunch the Cards must contend with.

"Freddy Fitzsimmons must win 15 games for the Giants if they're to stay up there. Joe Moore won't hit like he did last year. That's an old ball club. It's liable to come all apart any time, and Fitz may be the tip-off.

"Look at the records so far. We've been playing the toughest clubs in the league, the Cubs, Pirates and Reds, and don't think those Reds aren't tough. They're going to be bad news for everyone all year. Against that kind of opposition we've won nine and lost seven. The Giants have been playing much weaker teams, Phillies, Braves, Brooklyn. They've won nine, lost three. We won as many as they did, and look who we beat."

Dizzy figures he and Brother Daffy will win 40 games between them, that Lefty Willie Walker, who has already won three, will win at least a dozen more and Wild Bill Hallahan will be good for another 15. He rates Bud Tinning good for 10, Jess Haines five, and the rest of the staff 10 more. That totals 95 games.

Phillies Kept Idle Eighth Day in Row

By the Associated Press.

Philadelphia, May 7.—The Phillies were claiming some kind of long-distance record today as their sixth straight game was rained out and they were kept idle for the eighth consecutive day.

Meantime, old-time fans, keeping far from the water-soaked ball park, recalled the World Series of 1911, when Connie Mack's Athletics and John McGraw's New York Giants waited seven days to play the fourth championship game here because of bad weather.

Although no figures were available, the Phils' office said it believed eight straight days of idleness had never been equaled in a National League season.

Rickey Sees Dean Bringing 'New Era'

New York, May 7 (U.P.).—Branch Rickey paused over a plate of grilled meats at his hotel today and said that Dizzy Dean had ushered in a new era of baseball—an era of defensive play in which distance slugging was being shunted into the background.

"For that reason, I consider Dizzy Dean the most important player I've ever handled," continued the dynamic man with the grayish brown hair. "He is the successor to Babe Ruth as the game's No. 1 player, the game's No. 1 personality and the game's No. 1 showman. And baseball has gone Dean—just as it went Ruth back in 1920."

Tight Pitching Cited.

These words were as surprising as they were interesting — coming from Rickey, general manager of the most extensive chain-store system in baseball history — the St. Louis Cardinals' 28 clubs; coming from a man who had directed the destinies of more players than any other individual; coming from a man who fought Dean's salary demands fist and knee last winter.

"Not since Ruth swung the game

Nats as Strong As Any, Says Harris

Yanks Best of Four Clubs Washington Has Met, Pilot Asserts.

By the Associated Press.

ST. LOUIS, May 7.—Bucky Harris, back at the helm of his first love, the Washington Nats, can't see any standouts in the American League pennant race.

"I thought the race was open when it started," he explained today. "Now, after a couple of weeks, I think it's even more open."

Hurt by Higgins' Loss.

"Philadelphia will be better when Higgins gets back at third," he continued, asserting further that the "Browns are not as bad as they have looked."

"I have seen four other clubs in the league this year," Harris continued. "We have played New York, Boston, Philadelphia and Chicago. To my mind, New York is by far the strongest of the four.

"As a matter of fact, having met four of the eight clubs in the league, I figure my own club, Washington, is as strong as any of them."

Collins, of Phils, Is Sold to Cards

By the Associated Press.

Philadelphia, May 7.—The Phillies, believing that to string along with their young hurlers is the club's best chance—for 1936 if not for this season—today cut the first veteran from their mound staff.

In a deal announced as a straight cash transaction—the amount undisclosed—"Fidgety Phil" Collins, once the ace of the local National Leaguers' pitching group, was sold to the world's champion St. Louis Cardinals, for a sum reported to be between $7,500 and $10,000.

Open Golfers Will Qualify Monday

1,000 to Seek Berths in Sectional Trials Throughout U. S.

Six, Any of Whom May Become a Favorite, Must Compete.

By the Associated Press.

NEW YORK, May 7.—At least six golfers, any one of whom eventually may be installed as betting odds favorite to win the 1935 national open golf crown, will have to take their chances along with more than 1,000 others in the sectional qualifying trials at 36 holes medal play next Monday throughout the country.

Tommy Armour, Johnny Goodman and Willie MacFarlane, all former winners, and Craig Wood, Henry Picard and Harold (Jug) McSpaden will be among the players firing away on 25 battlefronts for 122 of the 162 places in the championship proper to be played at Oakmont starting June 6. The other 40 players are exempt from the qualifying tests.

Out of 30 Low Scorers.

Failure to finish among the first 30 low scorers and ties in the 1934 championship made it necessary to take the preliminary test. Wood was disqualified after the second round at Merion because he played the wrong ball.

Armour, former winner of the American, British and Canadian open championships, will attempt to qualify in the Chicago district, where such star performers as Denny Shute, Jock Hutchinson, Dick Metz, Frank Walsh and the amateurs, Chick Evans, jr., George Dawson and Johnny Lehman will be among the 139 contestants for 14 places.

The New York Metropolitan section has 130 entries for 13 places. The pace is certain to be swift, with Wood, Macfarlane, Johnny Farrell, Vic Ghezzi, Bryan Nelson, Bill Mehlhorn, Clarence Clark and Simon-pures Bobby Jacobson, Rudy Kneipper and Gene Homans among the hopefuls.

Hagen in Detroit.

Walter Hagen will signalize his twenty-first year in big-time competition by casting his lot with 39 other players in the Detroit district for five places. Other top-notchers there include Al Watrous, former Canadian open winner and runner-up in the 1926 British open, and Chuck Kocsis, an amateur.

McSpaden, one of the sensations of the winter tournament season, apparently has no threatening opposition in the Kansas City area, but Picard and Goodman may find the going a trifle difficult. Picard, the big money winner and lowest scorer on the pros' swing of the country last winter, is in the Philadelphia district with Gene Kunes, Felix Serafin and Ed Dudley. Good-

Grand Slam Wins Nursery Stakes as Postage Due Is Bumped

Interference Mars Finish Of Feature

Vanderbilt Entry Loses Chance When Hit by Bright and Early.

By Walter Haight.

A Staff Correspondent.

PIMLICO RACE TRACK, Md., May 7.—The Bomar Stable's Grand Slam won the twenty-seventh running of the Pimlico Nursery Stake here this afternoon and the race will go down in turf history as the "dizziest" renewal of the $2,500 test for 2-year-olds. In the first place, A. G. Vanderbilt caused much comment when he named five horses for the race although only two went to the post. In the second place, the race was run over a soggy, boggy track under a bright sun. In the third place, the colt Bright and Early went wild in the stretch and bumped the Vanderbilt colors out of the first money.

Postage Due, carrying the cerise and white colors, came up on the outside of Bright and Early nearing the sixteenth pole and seemed to be on the way to an easy victory. However, as Jockey Bejshak's mount went by, Bright and Early suddenly bore out and in a wild scramble carried Postage Due to the outside fence.

Too Late for the Money.

Bejshak attempted to get clear with Postage Due but again was bumped. In the meanwhile, Grand Slam, which had looked the part of a third-place horse a moment before, was running straight for the wire under Workman's urging. Postage Due finally became untangled from Bright and Early, but it was too late for the important money. Grand Slam was already going by the wire.

Bright and Early, which barely missed disqualification at Havre de Grace when he bothered horses in the stretch, was ruled out of the money today. This moved Bright Light into third place.

This was Sonny Workman's second winner of the day and the second time that he has won during the meeting when rivals bore out. Sandy Mack helped the Washington boy earlier in this session.

Drawn Sword Is Victor.

Drawn sword, a son of the mud-running Victorian, splashed to victory in the first race under a powerful ride by Sonny Workman. Installed the favorite, the colt withstood several challenges around the turn and then went on to stave off the closing bid of Wedge Lad by a nose margin. The crowd booed the judges for their placing of the juveniles but from where I sat it looked as if, for once, it was the judges' turn to boo the crowd. Royak Bird was third in the field of 12. The winner paid $4.50.

Favorite players made it two wins in a row in the second race when the odds-on choice, Ghost Dancer, toyed with the steeplechase field to defeat San Miguel by a length and a half. The important running was between these two and jockey Ball, on Ghost Dancer, elected to stay just off San Miguel's pace until the twelfth jump, where he went to the front. From that point to the wire Ball just hustled his mount enough to assure victory. Swansea was the only casual of the two-mile test, the old mare falling at the water jump. Starborn was third, far back. Ghost Dancer was a $3.90 proposition.

Long Shot Home First.

The combination of the ancient Zembla and the youthful apprentice, Georgie Watson, accounted for the third race at a mile and a sixteenth after being virtually left at the post. While Harky, Lillian Z and others were burning oil in the front, Zembla was finding her racing legs. She came around the leaders in the stretch, however, and won powerfully. It was a victory for the Christmases, of Marlboro, and the mutuel was $7.10.

Lonmeg, a $51.80 shot, jolted the talent in the fourth race by staging a furious stretch rush that defeated the favored Sun Portland. Third money went to Sou'wester. C. Hanford put up a brilliant ride on the three-year-old filly. Sun Portland had things his own way until Lonmeg came along.

The Marlboro Christmases made it a "double" for the day when Rough Party won his fifth straight race of the Maryland season and made it six wins out of seven starts. Rough Party, which won today in a $3,000 claiming race, began the season in the $1,000 class. Jockey J. O'Malley brought the filly up on the outside to score over Dancing Cloud in a drive. Epitaph was third. Despite her record, Rough Party paid $16.50.

Airway, a $20 shot won the sixth race and the Christmases completed a triple when Triolet took the final to pay $14.90.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—DRAWN SWORD, $4.50, $3.00, $2.50; WEDGE LAD, $6.00, $3.80; ROYAL BIRD, $7.30.

DRAWN SWORD, at home in the going and a stout factor in the early running, wore down ATHOLTON when reaching the home stretch, was placed to severe punishment in the closing drive and barely lasted to stall off WEDGE LAD. Latter, forced to race wide to enter contention, challenged strongly in the closing drive and was wearing the winner down at every stride. ROYAL BIRD weaved his way out of tight quarters in the early racing, found racing room between the leaders in the closing drive, and finished determinedly. ATHOLTON gained a slight lead in the early stages, saved ground, but failed to rally nearing the end. PETER PEPPER went well placed, but was not good enough. CARVER could not threaten while going wide. DONFORD had speed away from the barrier, but fell back after the first sixteenth.

SECOND RACE—Two miles. The Radnor Steeplechase. Purse, $1,000; claiming. For 4-year-olds and upward. Start good. Won driving; place, easily. Went to post at 2:32. Off at 2:53½. Winner, C. H. Two-dollar mutuels paid—GHOST DANCER, $3.90, $3.00, $2.50; SAN MIGUEL, $7.10, $3.90; STARBORN (entry), $3.10.

GHOST DANCER, in hand for the first mile, challenged SAN MIGUEL strongly going to the twelfth fence, recovered quickly after making a bad landing, then was steadied over the last fence to finish under urging. SAN MIGUEL, a keen factor in the early racing, gained command between calls, but could not withstand the winner in the final drive. STARBORN could not engage the leaders at any stage. GOLD SWEEPER went well over the first nine fences, then tired badly. OUT OF TOWN was held safe. SWANSEA slipped and fell at the second jump.

THIRD RACE—One and one-sixteenth miles. The Rose Hill. Purse, $900; claiming. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good from stall gates for all but Zembla. Won driving; place, same. Two-dollar mutuels paid—ZEMBLA, $7.10, $4.00, $2.90; LILLIAN Z., $3.00, $3.30; HARKY, $3.50.

ZEMBLA, away flat-footed and far back for the first six furlongs, went up on the outside when bettering her position, was placed to punishment in the last three-sixteenths and came resolutely to wear the leaders down in the closing furlong. LILLIAN Z. worked her way to the leaders steadily after racing under early restraint, but was unable to stay with the winner in the final drive. HARKY moved clear midway of the back stretch, saved ground thereafter, but weakened. TARTAN BETSY found clear passage throughout, but could not engage the leaders. GAY PARTY failed to rally after entering a contending position. MARYS MAY was held safe. BRINY DEEP went well for six furlongs.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—LONMEG, $51.80, $18.90, $7.40; SUN PORTLAND, $3.30, $2.80; SOU'WESTER, $4.30.

LONMEG, permitted to settle in her stride before moving into contention, repeatedly raced when given up, came to outside of SUN PORTLAND, and was up in the last sixteenth. SUN PORTLAND outran his field in the first turn, was steadied in front while saving ground, was placed to a hard drive in the final drive, but could not stall off the winner. SOU'WESTER went forwardly and held on well. CAPABLANCA was under strong urging for the entire trip. WAYWARD SON did not appear to favor the footing. BULL FIGHTER weakened after making his run. TELL IT stopped.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—ROUGH PARTY, $16.50, $7.80, $6.70; DANCING CLOUD, $6.70, $4.60; EPITAPH, $14.00.

ROUGH PARTY, badly outpaced for the first half-mile, gained fast after leaving the back stretch, swung very wide into the home stretch to take command, but tired and had only a safely lead when DANCING CLOUD finished strongly for place. Latter worked his way to the leaders steadily, continued gamely and was catching the winner approaching the finish. EPITAPH fell back midway of the turn, but held on willingly to outstay the others. WITAN could not engage the leaders. JIM CRAWFORD, favored for five furlongs, then retired. CIVIL WAR was rushed off his feet to gain command and weakened badly when the real test came.

SIXTH RACE—Four and one-half furlongs. The Pimlico Nursery. Purse, $2,500 added. For 2-year-olds. Start good from stall gates. Won driving; place, same. Went to post at 4:59. Off at 5:04. Winner, Bomar Stable's ch. c. (2), by Chance Play—Happy Bowdre. Trained by R. E. Potts. Value to winner, $2,780; second, $500; third, $300; fourth, $100. Time, 0:23 3-5, 0:49 3-5, 0:56 3-5.

‡Disqualified.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—GRAND SLAM, $9.40, $4.00, $2.60; POSTAGE DUE (entry), $2.60, $2.20; BRIGHT LIGHT, $2.60.

GRAND SLAM, in tight quarters leaving the barrier, found his way into contention midway of the turn, slipped through on the inside when BRIGHT AND EARLY carried POSTAGE DUE extremely wide when reaching the home stretch, closed with good courage under punishment and was up in the last sixteenth. POSTAGE DUE was racing strongly when moving abreast of BRIGHT AND EARLY at the stretch turn, but was badly bumped and carried out midway of the home stretch. He came strongly after overcoming interference. BRIGHT AND EARLY showed keen speed in the early stages, but swerved, then badly entering the home stretch, impeded POSTAGE DUE and was disqualified for foul. BRIGHT LIGHT lacked his usual speed and could not gain a forward position. CEASELESS was held safe. WINTER SPORT went wide. AROUSED stopped.

SEVENTH RACE—One and one-sixteenth miles. The Harford. Purse, $900; claiming. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good from stall gates. Won easily; place, driving. Went to post at 5:32. Off at 5:32½. Winner, R. W. Sauer's ch. c. (5), by Waygood—Round the World. Trained by owner. Value to winner, $650; second, $150; third, $75; fourth, $25. Time, 0:25, 0:51 3-5, 1:18 2-5, 1:54 2-5.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—AIRWAY, $20.00, $7.40, $5.90; BUNGALOW, $5.90, $5.40; TWIDGETS, $17.90.

AIRWAY worked his way to the leaders readily when placed to a drive, sprinted into an easy lead when reaching the home stretch, was placed to punishment when safely in front, then held his field safe. BUNGALOW bettered her position gradually in the last half-mile, saved ground, but could not challenge the winner. TWIDGETS went prominently and held on well under punishment. CANIMAR dropped far out of contention and was held safe. YELLOW METAL was never able to threaten, but closed a good gap. WAR SAINT weakened badly after being challenged. STEPBROTHER was sent up on the inside leaving the back stretch and tired.

EIGHTH RACE—One and one-eighth miles. The Raceland. Purse, $900; claiming. For 4-year-olds and upward. Start good from stall gates. Won handily; place, driving. Went to post at 5:57. Off at 6:00. Winner, Mrs. B. F. Christmas' b. f. (4), by Mont D'Orr II—Sonnet. Trained by S. F. Christmas. Value to winner, $650; second $150; third, $75; fourth, $25. Time, 0:25, 0:52 2-5, 1:18 3-5, 1:46 3-5, 2:00 4-5.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—TRIOLET, $14.90, $5.80, $3.00; MINTANA, $4.60, $3.40; PENCADER, $3.00.

TRIOLET, forcing the pace while following MINTANA, took command when shaken up rounding the final elbow, drew clear and was mildly urged during the closing stages. MINTANA came again after being overtaken and outstayed PENCADER in the closing issue. PENCADER worked his way up on the outside and came courageously in the closing test. DUNFERN was placed to severe punishment after seven furlongs, but failed to better his position. POST BRIGADE could not threaten. JAMES BOY, full of run early, flattened out when placed to a drive and was not perservered with during the closing drive.

Dr. Hayes and Burnett Tie With 72's in Woodmont Qualifying

Only 7 Able To Snap 80 First Day

Claude Rippy Cards 74; 70 of Field of 170 Vie for Honors.

A DENTIST and a fireman tied for medal honors yesterday at the end of the first day's qualifying in the Woodmont Invitation Golf Tournament.

Dr. William F. Hayes, former Georgetown University student, and Volney Burnett, District fire-fighter, who recently won the Rock Creek Spring tournament, shot 72's each to lead the scoring parade.

Both were 3 over par for the 18-hole route, Burnett taking a brace of 36's and Hayes scoring a 35 on the incoming side after going out in 37.

Only Seven Break 80.

With 70 golfers out of a field of close to 175 teeing off, only seven players were able to break 80 over the soggy and wind-swept course that was a veritable quagmire when the first threesome set out in the morning.

Claude Rippy, ranking municipal golfer, virtually assured himself of a qualifying berth by shooting a 36—36—74. Levi Yoder, of Indian Spring, faltering on the stretch after scoring a 35 on the first nine, wound up with 76, and Sam Rice, reformed big league baseball star, shot a 77, thanks to a brilliant 35 on the last nine.

Kenwood's two aces, Russ Hollebaugh, one of the longest amateur drivers in this section, and Maury Fitzgerald, who played together in the qualifying round, rang up 77 and 79, respectively. Hollebaugh covered the back nine in 37, and Fitzgerald hovered on the qualifying border line by hammering out a 35 after taking 44 strokes on the outgoing side.

Hayes, surprise package of the opening day, had three birdies during his round. He took a 6 on the 450-yard par 4 third, and a 5 on the short fifth, but rallied spectacularly, birdieing the seventh and eighth. He scored a birdie on the eleventh.

Play in the qualifying round will be resumed today, with Roger Peacock, Hickman Greene and Harry Pitt among the outstanding golfers competing.

Eastern-Tech Battle Delayed Until Today

DELAYED payment on Installment No. 3 of the inter-high series, which Eastern and Tech should have offered yesterday, will be made toddy at 2:30 p. m. unless that old bandit, J. Oopiter Pluvius, stages another holdup.

The sun was shining brightly over the Eastern field yesterday about the time the game should have started, but the diamond was still oozy from the downpours of the morning. Assistant Principal John Paul Collins, of Eastern, official game caller, had already done his stuff by that time, after having carefully probed the sod with his fountain pen.

Lefty Joe Sullivan and Bill Liggett, starting pitchers today for Eastern and Tech, respectively, warmed up their arms thoroughly by manipulating a pen for several hours in catching up on some back themes. They reported their arms in fine shape following the workout, but declared they had gone through a hard test, calling for some quick thinking in the pinches, and might not recover thoroughly until this afternoon.

Eastern is the defending champion and Tech the champion of the 1933 season. Eastern and Coach Charlie Guyon are still mindful of the upset defeat which Tech bestowed upon them that year and do not feel that the outrage has yet been fully avenged. Tech, after all, had not been seriously considered that year.

With Sullivan hurling for Eastern, for which he won four straight series victories last year, the Techmen are not exactly the favorites which their five victories in six starts might indicate.

Gene Sarazen Is Due Here Today

Will Give Two Exhibitions at Hecht Company Tomorrow.

GENE SARAZEN, a name synonymous with golf for the last 13 years, will arrive in Washington this morning and register at the Mayflower Hotel, where sometime today he will hold a reception for sports writers, golf pros and others interested in the game of golf.

Sarazen, former American and British open champion and National P. G. A. titleholder and more recently winner of Bobby Jones' Masters tournament at Augusta, is scheduled to put on two exhibitions at the Hecht Co., Seventh and F streets, tomorrow between 11 a. m. and 1 o'clock and 3 and 5 p. m.

May Visit Courses.

But genial Gene is the type of fellow who likes to fraternize with the pros, and it is probable that he will hie off to Chevy Chase to visit Bob Barnett, his old friend, and to Kenwood, to see Al Houghton, who is held in high esteem by the famous Italian shotmaker. Houghton claims Sarazene still owes him a couple of dollars for a match which Houghton won in Miami a few years ago.

At Hecht Company tomorrow Sarazen will unravel his skill, using a specially prepared net and sand trap. He will show how to get out of sand traps with the greatest of ease. At 4 o'clock in the afternoon Gene will present a box of autographed balls to James V. Brownell and his son, Bobby, for their victory in the father-and-son tournament recently.

Warrenton School Holds Horse Show

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Warrenton, Va., May 7. — The Warrenton Country School's annual horse show was held on the school farm, on Springs road, yesterday, and brought out a large crowd. There were ten classes, seven open to the public.

A popular victory was that in junior horsemanship for the school riders, which was awarded Miss Kathleen O'Malley. Miss Jane Rinehart, of Charlottesville, won the senior horsemanship, on Sunny Girl. Miss Babbs Burton, of Chicago, won first and second in touch and out, showing excellent horsemanship.

Hunter Hacks, with 17 entries, was a handfull for the judges, who finally decided Alex Calvert's All Horse, which scored to win in ladies' Hunters, also several times in the Stuyvesant School Horse Show, on Friday, was the best; Mrs. R. C. Winmill's Sin Quedado, exhibited by Miss Emily North King, second, and Holly, owned by Mrs. Connie Downs, third.

Va. Stars Face Chevy Chase This Week

Richmond Women Will Use Champions in Team Match.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

RICHMOND, May 7.—A team of championship proportions is being lined up by the Country Club of Virginia women, who play a two-day match with Chevy Chase here on Wednesday and Thursday over the new James River championship layout. The team, announced today, lists two of Virginia's most formidable competitors in Mrs. Jean Jones and Mrs. J. Thomas Priddy, who will play No. 1 and 2, respectively.

Formation of the team was delayed until after completion of the Country Club spring medal tournament, won by Mrs. Jones by a one-stroke margin over Mrs. Priddy. They tied at 372 for 72 holes and Mrs. Jones' 89 was good enough to win on the ninetieth hole.

Each of them has won city and State championships in the past and, in addition, Mrs. Jones one year held the Middle Atlantic crown.

Mrs. Buford Scott and Mrs. C. B. Walden, team captain, are others of city championship caliber. Mrs. Walden holds the title at present, Mrs. Basil Coale, Mrs. George Owens, Mrs. C. C. Vaughan and Mrs. John Ryland complete the team.

Plans call for foursomes on Wednesday afternoon, starting at 1:30 o'clock, with singles on Thursday morning.

College Card for Today Lean; G. W. Faces Hampden-Sydney

OLD MOTHER Hubbard's cupboard may have been bare, but you should have a look at today's collegiate sports schedule. One baseball game and a couple of tennis matches are all the young campus cut-ups will bestir themselves to, and there is not the slightest assurance that these will be of top-notch quality.

George Washington's diamond forces will come face to face with Hampden-Sydney, at Griffith Stadium at 3 o'clock, with the Colonials expected to ring up their fourth consecutive victory. Virginia Poly's hapless netmen appear to be headed for their third straight setback in this territory in their match with Georgetown, and Maryland is expected to conquer Western Maryland's racqueters.

Maryland's ball game with Virginia was called off yesterday because of wet grounds, and since neither team has a spot on the schedule for a battle in the future, the game will not be played. Thus, the Terps will not see action this week until Washington and Lee visits College Park on Friday, after having played Georgetown tomorrow.

Maryland's lacrosse squad is drilling with feverish diligence for the big Navy match Saturday, and it is probable that the entire squad will be in good shape by then. Lou Ennis, defense man, and Henry Schaaf, center, were back in uniform yesterday after being on the injured list a week.

Bi-County Loop To Open on Sunday

Three Games Are Slated in Maryland League, New Group.

THE newly formed Maryland County League, an affiliate of The Washington Post Sandlot Baseball Association, will open its season Sunday with an attractive program of three games, bringing into competition for Post Association honors strong teams from Prince Georges and Montgomery counties.

The new league is a consolidation of the Prince Georges and Montgomery County loops, both of which enjoyed successful seasons under The Post banner last season. The present league, composed of eight teams, gives each of the competitors a wider range of opposition, and its organization was eagerly sought by the representatives of both of last year's five-team groups. Franchises and eligibility lists must be posted by Friday.

Faces North Washington.

White Haven faces North Washington on the latter's field as these teams take up where they left off last year in a bitter feud, which lent color and action to the contests. There is plenty of interest, too, in the Horning Jeweler-Wheaton battle on the Wheaton Field. It will mark the debut of Brooke Grubbs' Wheaton team in The Post Association ranks. The Jewelers, fresh from a victory last Sunday over the Mount Rainier Grays, rank among the strongest contenders in the league.

In the other league attraction Mount Rainier A. C. engages the Tuxedo-Cheverly Fire Department on the Bladensburg Road diamond, just across the District line.

All games will be called at 3 o'clock.

The Mount Rainier-Cabin John League contest will be played at a later date due to the inability of these teams to effect a cancellation of previously scheduled games.

A Sunday game with an unlimited or senior team is sought by the Branchville A. C. on its own diamond. Call Manager Jerry Small at Berwyn 335.

Wilson and William Rand, of Yale; Jack Young, of Pennsylvania Military College, and Winston Frost, of Harvard, who transferred from the University of Virginia, are the members.

Invitations are being extended to the following polo clubs for a two-game week-end series to be played at White Sulphur during the summer: Camargo Polo Club, Cincinnati; Fauquier-Loudoun Polo Association, The Plains, Va.; Iroquois Hunt and Polo Club, Lexington, Ky.; Maryland Polo Club, Baltimore; Miami Valley Hunt and Polo Club, Dayton, Ohio; River Ridge Riding and Polo Club, Columbus, Ohio; Hunting Valley Polo Club, Chagrin Falls, Ohio, and War Department, Washington.

Cubs Strongest, Says Dizzy Dean

to heavy hitting can I remember a season that started off with such emphasis on tight pitching and brilliant fielding to support the pitchers," said Rickey. "This is noticeable, not only in the majors, but clear down through the minors.

"And an even more important indication is this: More than half of the youngsters who tried out at major and minor camps this spring wanted to be pitchers, I say this because it was true at all of our camps where 1,085 players reported."

So 23-year-old Diz is getting the headlines—and the money—about $80,000 for 1935, counting the Cards' salary and outside revenues.

What did Dizzy have to say about Rickey's statements, probably the greatest and most unexpected compliment he ever received? The great Dean was loitering in the hotel lobby because the Brooklyn game was washed out.

"Jeez! Did Branch say that?" asked Diz. "Well—maybe he's right. He's a right smart fellah, and he's been around a long time. I noticed myself that most of the pitchers are sure fogging 'em over this season. Yeah—I guess Branch is right but he didn't talk like that last winter."

Sixty-seven birds, bucking head winds and rain, made slow time compared to the speed of the previous week. The next race will be held Sunday, May 12, from Chillicothe, Ohio.

Twins to Meet Roosevelt's Trackmen

Teams Will Clash Today; Episcopal's Netmen Face N. C. Frosh.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

ALEXANDRIA, Va., May 7.—Alexandria High School's undefeated trackmen will compete in their second dual meet of the season tomorrow afternoon when they oppose Roosevelt in Washington.

The engagement is expected to serve as a final tuning up for the Twins, who will compete in the Virginia Literary and Athletic League meet at Charlottesville on Saturday.

Coach Garner is banking heavily on Capt. Paul Shu, who competes in all field events except the pole vault; Reds McMenamin, hurdler, and Burrows and Rutledge, distance runners.

Episcopal High School faces its crucial tennis test tomorrow at the local school, when the strong North Carolina University freshmen team provides the opposition.

Russ Kidwell's St. Mary's Celtics will invade Front Royal, Va., on Sunday, where they meet the strong Front Royal All-Stars in the first of a 3-game series.

Art Lacey or Jerry Titcomb will pitch for the Celts.

The sailing association will conduct races every Sunday throughout the summer.

time when the bases were full and two were out.

Walkup, the Browns' third pitcher, got off to a dubious start in the sixth inning when he walked Whitehill to start matters and then pitched a home run ball to Myer as the Nats scored their final runs of the day.

Whitehill had yielded a run to the Browns in the fifth when Hemsley singled and Strange doubled, and he gave them another in the sixth. They reduced his lead to 7-2 in the seventh, but in the next inning Whitehill escaped unscathed from an omnious situation. Two walks and a single by Melillo had filled the bases when Whitehill struck out Grube on a slow curve with the count 3 and 2.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Glenville, W. Va., May 7.—Glenville High School easily won first honors at the senior field and track events here at the week-end as a part of the annual school day program in Gilmer County. Normantown took second rating and Tanner, third.

Sothoron Wins Fourth Letter At Maryland U.

NORWOOD L. (SOUTH) SOTHORON, University of Maryland ace, yesterday added another star to his gleaming athletic diadem when it was disclosed that he has earned his fourth letter in a major sport. "South" will receive his insignia in baseball when they are passed around at the June assembly.

A hasty examination of time-yellowed files at the university last night failed to reveal another four-letter athlete, although there is a remote possibility that there may have been one in the good old days. It is, however, very probable that the handsome, curly-haired Sothoron is the first to win this distinction.

"South" has participated in two-thirds of the ball games scheduled, or enough to be assured of winning his letter. This is his first year on the nine, although baseball is his first love. He was an All-American in lacrosse last spring, and in football was selected as the All-Southern quarter back. He also won the golden "M" in basket ball.

Sothoron will graduate in June. He is taking a post-graduate course in the school of business administration.

Woodberry Plans For Golf Tourney

Will Be Host to Schoolboys of State May 18.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Woodberry Forest, Va., May 7.—The 36-hole invitation golf tournamet for Virginia schoolboys held annually at Woodberry Forest will be played this year on May 18. The tournament is divided into two divisions, senior and junior divisions. Every school in Virginia is invited to enter a 2-player team and an extra contestant—two seniors and a junior. Last year there were 39 contestants representing 16 schools.

The tournament has three distinct features. The player with the low score for the 36 holes will be acclaimed the Virginia interscholastic golf champion for 1935 and awarded a golf medal. The winning school will be the one whose team of two players turns in the low aggregate score for the day's play. The winner of the junior division becomes the State junior golf champion. In this division there is no team play.

Rapping Foes, Sonnenberg Hails Self

By George Considine.

WHEN Dynamite Gus Sonnenberg is carded anywhere but in the top spot of a rassling show, that, friend, is news.

Well, that's the sitchyashun tomorrow night at the Auditorium as the famed creator of the Flying Tackle butts it out with hard-boiled Pat McKay in support of the highly publicized Rudy - Dusek - George Zaharias feature.

With the possible exception of Red Grange, Sonnenberg stands as the only man personally to change the whole complexion of a sport. Fresh off the Dartmouth football field in '28, he took a slow, drab pastime and converted it into a whirlwind, exciting, profitable business.

Used Widely Now.

So extensively has the flying tackle been exploited since that time that it now is practically synonymous with the art of rassling. Dynamite Gus insists, however, that attempts to imitate his original tackle have fallen considerably short and that what might appear to be an adaptation of his world-renowned ramming ability amounts to nothing more than a body charge.

"The flying tackle," explains Gus, "is in reality a head butt from short range. Once it connects properly it knocks a man out every bit as thoroughly as did Jack Dempsey's left hook. I can recall instances when it sent two really great rasslers to the hospital.

Ligaments Torn.

"When Karl Projello was going guns around Philadelphia, I flattened him with my tackle and he suffered several torn ligaments in his chest. On another occasion I knocked out Dick Shikat so completely that he couldn't work again for two months."

Two years ago Sonnenberg, disturbed by heavy financial losses and on the verge of a physical breakdown, was given only three months to live by a prominent physician.

So Gus went to Australia and in a desperate effort to get well, took up wrestling again. Strange as it seems, he soon returned to old-time form and today has regained the health and dynamite that rocketed him to the world's heavyweight title back in 1929.

Blanton Causes Pirate Boss to Chuckle

Has Won Four Contests; Cardinals Let Him Go, Boss Laughs.

By the Associated Press.

PITTSBURGH, May 7.—Chuckling at his desk today is the diminutive "admiral" of the Pittsburgh Pirates, William (Bill) Benswanger, son-in-law of the late Barney Dreyfuss.

He is checking over the one bright spot of his brig's 1935 cruise—the record of a curly, red-haired flinger, shipped as Darrell Elijah Blanton, but better known as Cy, an affectionate term given the 25-year-old Shawnee (Okla.) lad by some Greensboro (N. C.) wit.

"And the Cardinals once had him," goes on the admiral, as he fills his pipe, "but then, they have a lot of them, don't they?"

Became Free Agent.

Blanton belonged to the Cards in 1931, when he pitched for Greensboro, but was released to Springfield, Ill., then Independence, Kans., Joplin, Mo., and Hutchison, Kans., finally becoming a free agent because he was willing to waive back salary due him.

A paper which Benswanger is fondling gives Blanton's brief but amazing record with the Pirates:

April 19—Beat St. Louis, 3-0, with 1 hit, fanned 6.

April 24—Beat Cincinnati, 6-2, 6 hits, fanned 11.

April 29—Beat St. Louis and Dizzy Dean, 3-2, 8 hits, fanned 5.

May 4—Beat Brooklyn, 1-0, 3 hits, fanned 6.

Total: Won 4, fanned 30, pitched 37 innings, earned run per game 0.74.

Pitched 256 Innings.

"Not quite as good as he was in the minors," goes on Bill. "You know in 1933 he pitched 256 innings in the Western League and fanned 184, including 20 in one game. Last year with Albany he fanned 20 in one night game and 18 in a day game. I know because I watch those things. Did I ever tell you how we happened to get him?

"I watch these averages every week and there is a fellow pitching out with St. Joseph who's fanning so many I think it is a misprint. But he has a list of walks and wild pitches about as big.

"Well, we had a club out in that league, Tulsa, and a mighty good fellow was managing it, Art Griggs. We decide to get out of the club because it's costing too much and Griggs comes down to the office and we settle up—you know, divide the players, etc.

"When we got through I asks Griggs if he knows anything about a fellow named Blanton pitching for St. Joe and he says, 'Know him? Why I own him.'

Probably $5,000.

"So I says, 'Well, Art, he's mine,' and I bought him. I didn't get him for a song, you understand, but I didn't pay a big sum." 'Which meant, he likely paid $5,000 or less.)

The Pirate chief's chuckle raises almost to a full laugh at this point, as he thumps over Blanton's Minor League record. Says he:

"And it's not a week, mind you, 'till he pitches a no-hit, no-run game. And maybe the scouts don't go scramming out. But they're a week too late——"

In his excitement Bill empties his newly filled pipe. And if his language appears a little unusual for the polished scholar that he is, blame it on the ball players—he's hobnobbing and living with them so much since his mother-in-law asked him to handle the club's affairs three years ago.

Sande and Coucci In Track Victory

Polycletus Is Four-Length Winner at Jamaica.

By the Associated Press.

Jamaica Race Track N. Y., May 7. Earl Sande, jockey idol of a few years ago and now a trainer and night club singer as well, and Silvio Coucci, as popular as any of the present crop of riders, both had a hand in the galloping victory of Maxwell Howard's Polycletus in the Sands Point, a grade "C" handicap that featured today's program. Sande had the gelding in prime condition for his seasonal debut and, under Coucci's hustling ride, the 4-year-old son of Polymelian won by four lengths. It was the first horse Sande had saddled at the meeting.

Oddly enough, Henry Lingelbach's Ballos, which Polycletus led home in his last start at this track last fall, again was runner-up.

W. S. Kilmer's Sun Arena lost the place by a length.

Two House Members Win Handball Match

Representatives Matthew J. Merritt, of New York, and David D. Terry, of Arkansas, showed themselves rather representative in sport yesterday by taking two out of three games in handball from Joe Callahan, assistant superintendent of the Folding Room, and Frank Bartos, of the Post Office Department, 21-10, 19-21 and 21-15. The games were played in the House Office Building gymnasium.

Park Lacking, Colleges Delay 'World' Series

New York, May 7 (AP).—Unforeseen complications in the matter of obtaining one of the two major league parks has caused postponement for one year, at least, of the inauguration of an intercollegiate baseball "world series."

The idea was sponsored by Andy Coakley, veteran Columbia University diamond coach, who announced today he was unable to engage either the Yankee Stadium or the Polo Grounds for the week beginning June 24, when it was planned to bring together eight outstanding college nines from all sections of the country.

W. & L. Golfers Play Carolina Tomorrow

Special Dispatch to The Post.

LEXINGTON, Va., May 7.—Unbeaten and hardly threatened this spring, Washington and Lee's golfers will journey to Greensboro, N. C., tomorrow to meet North Carolina at Sedgefield Thursday before defending their Southern Conference championship the following day on the same links.

The Generals, paced by Jimmie Watts and Duncan McDavid, started their season with a smashing 12-6 triumph over Florida's strong team on the local course, and followed up with a 13½-4½ victory over Virginia. After taking the Cavaliers into camp, Coach Twombley's long-driving lads handed Hampden-Sydney an 18-0 trimming on the Tri-Brook course here, then met V. P. I. at Boonsboro, Lynchburg, and came out with a 10½-7½ victory after the Gobblers showed unexpected strength on the last nine.

Last week-end the team traveled to Washington and defeated Catholic U., 16½-1½, in their last meet before the Greensboro clashes.

McDavid, Washington and Lee captain, who is from Pensacola, Fla., has been playing in the important No. I position most of the season, with Watts in No. 2. McDavid, who also was captain of the Washington and Lee swimming team that won the conference titles this year, went to the finals of the Alabama State tournament in 1931 and has been playing par golf most of the time since then. Watts, who is from Lynchburg, Va., was put out of the running in the semifinals of the Old Dominion tournament at Hot Springs this spring by Spence Kerkow, a W. and L. freshman. Watts won the Old Dominion title two years ago and has been well up in other tournaments in the State, besides participating in the national amateur last year.

Twombley said today he will take six men to Greensboro. Besides McDavid and Watts, he plans to take Charlie Cross, of Portsmouth, Va., and Bill Alexander, of Washington, both regular members of the team; Cy Anderson, also of Washington, who has been shooting spectacular golf in the past two matches, and Jack Simmons, of Richmond; Eugene Krewsol, also of Washington, manager of the team, who shoots a good enough game, also will make the trip.

Lester Reeves Victor In Law College Golf

With the aid of a generous handicapping committee and a few hefty swings of his driver, Lester Reeves won the blind bogey golf tournament staged by students of the Washington College of Law at East Potomac course. Reeves' gross score was 83, which was reduced to 69, with a 14-stroke handicap.

Johnny Horstkamp shot 88-18, for a 70 and second honors, while Garfield Riley was third with 102-30—72. Miss Essie Vaughn won the ladies' prize with a score of 124.

Lester Reeves, 83—14—69; John Horstkamp, 88—18—70; Garfield Riley, 102—30—72; George Folsom, 91—18—73; C. T. Lawrence, 95—16—79; Frank Heathco, 103—23—80; Miss Essie Vaughan, 124—42—82; C. J. Williams, 95—12—83; Miss Nora Rentz, 123—40—85; G. M. Buckles, 126—22—86; Hugh McCabe, 105—15—90; Miss Zulah Purvis, 136—45—91; Carl P. Friend, 112—15—97.

Maryland U. Golfers To Vie in First Tourney

The University of Maryland golf team will make its first bid for supremacy in the Southern Conference championship Friday at the Sedgefield course in Greensboro, N. C.

Practice Tests For Post Golf Are Slated

Congressional to Be Open Tomorrow; 50 Entries Already Received.

CONGRESSIONAL COUNTRY CLUB'S course will be open tomorrow morning for practice rounds for The Washington Post Match Play Handicap Tournament, but only those women golfers who have paid their entrance fees will be permitted to play the course.

Mrs. Roy C. Miller, tournament chairman of the District Women's Golf Association, already has received more than 50 entries for the event which is next in importance to the District championship.

Among the prominent women golfers who will play in the tournament opening Monday and continuing through Saturday are Mrs. Betty Meckley, of Indian Spring; Mrs. Roland Mackenzie, defending champion; Mrs. Jack Scott, Miss Helen Dettweiler and Mrs. J. F. Dowdall, all of Congressional; Mrs. L. G. Pray, Manor champion; Miss Virginia Pope and Mrs. Leo Walper, of Kenwood; Miss Ellen Kincaid, Beaver Dam champion; Mrs. A. E. Dedicke, of Army and Navy; Miss Elizabeth Houghton, of Chevy Chase, 1933 Washington Post champion; Miss Louise Claytor, Mrs. Hume Wrong, Mrs. McCook Knox, three other Chevy Chase golfers; Mrs. H. R. Quinter, of Columbia.

Only Event of Kind.

The Washington Post Tournament is the only event in the District which offers the low and high handicap players a chance to battle on even terms. With 18 the handicap limit both in the qualifying round and match play, the tournament is of such a nature that a woman with a 16 handicap is able to hold her own with one of a two or three rating. This is because seven-eighths the difference of the handicap is used in match play.

799 Birds Missing In 200-Mile Race

Washington pigeon fanciers experienced one of their most disastrous races in a decade Sunday when a check-up on 869 birds released at Roanoke, Va., in a 200-mile race revealed that only 12 successfully bucked the elements in returning to their home lofts.

The birds were flown by members of the National Capital Racing Pigeon Concourse, a body representing all racing clubs in the city. The Thomas loft won the test as its only entry to finish averaged 629.60 yards per minute through stormy weather.

The first 11 of the 12 to finish are diploma winners. Average speed in yards per minute is also given.

Oils Are Firm In Reactionary Stock Market

Usual Leaders Lose Up to More Than a Point in Smaller Volume.

By the Associated Press.

New York, May 7.—Stocks gave ground today in a relatively quiet market in which turnover dropped well below the 1,000,000-share mark of the previous session.

Many of the usual bell-wethers of the share list lost major fractions to a point or so each, although plus signs were not wholly absent in the closing list. The oils and some scattered specialties were able to counter the general trend moderately.

Major commodities offered no encouragement to the equity market and both corporate and government loans were easy. Carrier liens, which had been good gainers after the rail pension decision of Monday, were generally soft and railroad shares pursued a generally hesitant course. Transactions were 813,210 shares.

The general firmness in the price structure of crude and refined petroleum recently was reported in Wall Street quarters to be largely the result of good consumption, and some unofficial estimates in brokerage quarters set 1935's probable gasoline use at the highest on record. The more favorable statistical position of the industry found traders interested in the stocks at advancing prices in today's generally poor market. Standard Oils of New Jersey and California, Seaboard Oil, Continental, Texas and others advanced fractions to a point or so.

Cotton Hovers In Thin Market

New Crop Positions Tend to Lower Levels; May Closes at 11.75.

By the Associated Press.

New York, May 7.—Cotton fluctuated irregularly over a range of 4 to 7 points today with business restricted. Near months closed 1 to 2 points net higher on trade support, while new crop positions ended unchanged to 6 points lower under liquidation and foreign selling.

Liverpool and continental selling seemed to center in March during the early trading and had a rather depressing influence on the general list. Spot houses and the trade furnished the principal support but after holding steady during most of the session, the market turned easier under Wall street and local selling due to late heaviness of stocks and wheat. Price fixing in May and July, however, accounted for last minute recoveries.

Futures	Price Range. High	Low	Last
July	11.78	11.72	11.77@78
October	11.52	11.45	11.47@48
December	11.58	11.52	11.55
January	11.61	11.55	11.57
March	11.66	11.62	11.63

Spot quiet; middling, 12.15.

Cottonseed Oil.

Bleachable cottonseed oil closed easy, 5 to 6 points lower. Sales were 30 contracts. Weakness of grains and a lower market for lard, with scattered liquidation in September and October, accounted for the downward trend. Bleachable spot nominal; May closed 10:30, July 10.47, September 10.51, October 10.40, December 10.35.

Rising Gem Purchases Hailed as Good Omen

New York, May 7.—Signs of general business recovery are being reflected more distinctly in the bright new jewelry which the women of the country are displaying with more lavishness than at any time since 1929, Dun & Bradstreet say. The broadening of demand has been uninterrupted since the summer of 1933. Sales of jewelry in 1934 were in excess of the 1933 total on an average of 30 to 40 per cent, with some districts running as high as 75 per cent.

Tax on Gasoline Is 22.2 Per Cent Refinery Price

Levy on Lubricating Oil Is 36.4%; 21 States Make Protest.

New York, May 7.—The 1-cent per gallon Federal tax on gasoline, amounting to 22.2 per cent of the 4.5-cent price at the point of taxation, the refinery, constitutes the second highest rate of the six Federal automotive taxes. The only higher rate is that on lubricating oil, the 4-cent per gallon tax amounting to 36.4 per cent of the refinery price of 11 cents a gallon.

These figures, published in a memorandum prepared by the American petroleum industries committee, assume particular significance as a result of reports from Washington that Congress is considering eliminating its tax on gasoline and lubricating oil and of reducing the tax on cigarettes.

Twenty-one State legislatures have sent memorials to Congress, and nearly 300 civic, commercial, farm, motorists' and other organizations have passed resolutions demanding that the tax on gasoline be abolished. The Vinson subcommittee on double taxation and several other congressional committees have also recommended that the Federal tax be dropped, considering it an invasion of State tax fields. The Federal tax on gasoline was levied as a temporary one-year revenue measure in 1932, and it has twice been extended.

Radio Quarter Net $1,618,025

Compares With $1,235,725 in 1934 Period.

By the Associated Press.

New York, May 7.—The Radio Corporation of America and subsidiaries report for the first quarter net profit of $1,618,025 after charges, interest, depreciation, amortization and Federal taxes. This is equal, after allowing for quarterly dividend requirements on the 7 per cent preferred "A" shares and $5 preferred "B" shares to 2 cents a share on 13,130,690 shares of common.

This compares with net profit of $1,235,725 or $1.04 a share on the $5 preferred "B" stock after dividend requirements on the preferred "A" in the March quarter of 1934.

Pension Decision Promises No Immediate Relief to Hard Pressed Railroads; Traffic Upturn of 10-20 Per Cent Alone Could Solve Problem.

By a Special Correspondent.

New York, May 7.—The almost complete indifference with which the security markets received the announcement that the United States Supreme Court had declared the railroad retirement act unconstitutional reflected the general conviction of investors and speculators that the pension bill of itself would not change the basic plight of the carriers materially.

Undoubtedly, the retirement act was a burdensome enactment. It imposed an annual contribution on the railroads of 4 per cent of their pay rolls, or about $60,000,000 annually. Even worse, if the fund raised by this 4 per cent contributed by the railroads and 2 per cent more by employes did not prove large enough to meet the scheduled payment to retired employes, then additional assessments were to be levied. As a matter of fact, in the long run, much more than $60,000,000 annually from the railroads would have been required to finance the pensions. Removal of this statute from the books is thus an important step toward clarifying the future outlook for the railroads.

Immediately, however, the decision brings only a small measure of relief. Since many carriers already maintain pensions plans, the net saving through the annulment of the retirement act is not much more than $40,000,000 per year.

Rising Expenses Cut Further Into Earnings.

Last year the railroads earned from all sources approximately $650,000,000. If they had paid all of their interest charges and lease rentals, they would have required over $675,000,000 for the purpose, which would have left a deficit of more than $25,000,000. Actually, however, there were extensive defaults on interest payments, as is well known, so that interest and lease rental outlays were only about $575,000,000. A few railroads showed substantial earnings over and above their fixed charges, but the large majority showed substantial deficits.

During the first quarter of this year another decline in railroad earning power was suffered. The cause of this decline is enlightening. Eliminating the pension contributions, the railroads of the country earned less than $100,000,000 of net railway operating income for the first three months of the year. In the same period of 1934 they earned more than $112,000,000. This fall of 12 per cent in operating income reflected entirely an increase in expenses, as gross revenues were actually somewhat larger this year than last.

With the present volume of traffic, rigid and gradually rising expenses and heavy fixed charges spell continued financial disaster for a number of railroad corporations. Not far from $2,500,000,000 in railroad obligations are now in default, following additions to the list of the Chicago, Milwaukee, St. Paul & Pacific and Chicago & Northwestern this year. It is true that the Interstate Commerce Commission recently granted a rate rise for an emergency period, but this will merely just about offset a 5 per cent wage restoration which went into effect April 1.

Carrier managements are hesitant about seeking to obtain a new wage reduction at this time, since the political aid of the railroad brotherhoods is desired to encourage enactment by Congress of the Eastman program for equal regulation of all forms of transportation. Such equality of regulation, while unlikely to give much immediate relief, would contribute, like the pension decision, to stabilize the long-run outlook for the railroads.

More Traffic Basic Need; Outlook Is Improving.

The basic need of the railroads of the country is for more traffic, so as to increase their gross earnings. Then the burden of rigid expenses and even more rigid fixed charges would press less heavily upon the carriers. A 10 per cent rise in traffic, it has been estimated, would probably increase net revenues by $100,000,000, even if maintenance outlays become rather more liberal, an obvious necessity. A 20 per cent rise in traffic might give $250,000,000 more in operating and other income. This would be sufficient to end the danger of further serious financial collapses among railroad companies, and it would open the way to reorganization of those now in the hands of the courts.

Fundamental railroad recovery is thus tied up closely with an upturn in general business that would generate more traffic, and especially an increase in activity in the capital goods industries. These would produce bulk traffic that must of necessity move by rail.

The work-relief program, increased activity in the automobile industry and heavier crop movements in the South and the Northwest are three factors promising an improvement in rail traffic for the second half of this year. A revival of the private building industry would be most significant, however, as assurance of a protracted and adequate upturn in railroad traffic.

New York, May 7 (AP).—Based on reports from 196 companies now available, says the Standard Statictics Co., earnings of industrial corporations in the first quarter showed an average gain of 27.3 per cent over results for the corresponding period a year ago.

Investment Bankers Code Body Confers

District Representatives Discuss Problems of New Issues.

By Karl von Lewinski.

Several sweeping recommendations for amendments to the national investment bankers code were drafted at the meeting of the thirteenth regional code committee held in the office of Chairman Y. E. Booker yesterday afternoon. A draft of the recommendations will be forwarded to national headquarters for action, Wallace Fulton, national director of compliance of the investment bankers national code committee, attended the meeting, which was called by Chairman Booker to clarify many recent problems caused by enormous offerings of new issues.

Members of the code committee discussed numerous inadvertent violations and misunderstandings that have arisen under the new code since the recent flood of new financing. A compilation of all new offerings, including the refunding issues, made during April, showed the total at a four-year peak of $455,206,000.

The following members of the regional code committee attended the conference: Walter S. Robertson, of Richmond; James S. Wheedbee, of Baltimore, and Ellicot H. Worthington, of Baltimore. Another member of the committee, Wylie R. Cooke, of Lynchberg, Va., failed to attend, due to illness.

Life Insurance Week.

National observance of life insurance week is scheduled from May 13 to 18, according to a statement issued yesterday by Winthrop C. Batchelder, local chairman of the campaign.

BATCHELDER.

Inaugurated several years ago by life insurance salesmen in collaboration with their home offices to promote better public understanding of the many services offered, the week will have as its slogan, "The sooner you plan your future, the better the future will be."

Chairman Batchelder is the newly appointed general agent of the Connecticut General Life Insurance Co. here. Prior to his appointment on March 18, he was engaged in supervisory work in the life insurance field and had headquarters in Cleveland, Ohio.

Wholesale Sales Decline.

A slight decline in wholesale sales and collections during April in 91 of the country's major markets was reported yesterday by the National Association of Credit Men.

The current decline was not unexpected, however, because the record in the previous month's survey showed better-than-usual conditions. The present downturn is caused mainly by a number of cities returning from the "good" classification to that of "fair."

The following cities reported both "good" sales and "good" collections: Phoenix, Ariz.; Chicago, Ill.; Dayton, Ohio; Oakland, Calif.; Waterloo, Iowa; Knoxville, Tenn.; Richmond, Va.; San Diego, Calif.; Louisville, Ky.; Bristol, Ky.

A 327 per cent increase in membership during the first four months of 1935, as compared to the same period of 1934, and a gain of 48 per cent during April over March, of this year, is reported on behalf of the Keystone Automobile Club by George E. Keneipp, manager.

King Named Executive Secretary.

Henry King, former Central High School football star, has been named executive secretary of Wolf & Cohen, Inc., local insurance agents, according to an announcement yesterday.

KING.

For the past seven years King has been affiliated with the Palace Laundry here as sales manager. Prior to that he was associated with R. H. Macy & Co. of New York City.

Coffee Bonfire Toll Now 34,971,000 Bags

New York, May 7.—Destruction of coffee in Brazil continues at a much reduced rate, it was disclosed in cables to the New York Coffee and Sugar Exchange today, which said that during the last half of April 28,000 bags were burned. This compares with 44,000 bags destroyed during the first half, a total of 72,000 for the month, against 53,000 during March, 224,000 during February and 514,000 during January. Since the program was started in June, 1931, 34,971,000 bags have been destroyed.

Bankers Unite In Opposition To Pending Bill

Letter Sent to 12,000 A. B. A. Members Points to Vigorous Fight.

New York, May 7.—In a letter sent today to its 12,000 members by the American Bankers Association, criticizing several features in titles I and II of the pending House Banking and Currency Committee's new draft of the banking act of 1935, it is declared that "we expect to oppose vigorously those sections which we do not consider to be in the interest of the public or of the banks."

The communication, signed by R. S. Hecht, president of the association, states that the bankers' representatives have "endeavored to take a constructive position in helping to enact effective and workable banking legislation."

Commenting on the letter, Mr. Hecht said today: "We find it our duty to disagree actively, and we hope effectively in respect to the points raised in our letter, and will try to get Congress to see them our way."

"A very undesirable change has been made in the rate of assessment to be levied," it says. "In the original proposal, which we understand has the approval of the directors of the FDIC, it was provided that the directors of the corporation could annually make such assessments as they deemed necessary up to a limit of one-twelfth of 1 per cent on total deposits. The new bill changes this basis of assessment and provides that the directors must make an annual assessment of one-eighth of 1 per cent, which is an increase of 50 per cent to be paid by the banks besides making the assessment compulsory instead of discretionary with the corporation.

Levy Called Excessive.

"We believe that in view of other increased costs now imposed upon banks and in view of low interest income and reduced earnings, the new bill creates an excessive levy which can not well be borne by banks without endangering their ability to build up proper reserves to take care of individual losses which are bound to occur."

In discussing Title II, the letter says: "The new provisions vesting authority over open market operations, discount rates and reserve requirements in the Federal Reserve Board, which is directed only to 'consult' with a committee of five governors, but who will have no vote in the determinations of the open market committee, is, as was pointed out in the report of our special committee, no more acceptable than the original proposal.

"Therefore, we are bound to stand upon the position taken by our committee—that is, that if it is finally determined that any legislation on this subject is deemed to be necessary at this session, the governors of the Federal Reserve Banks should serve not merely in an advisory capacity, but should have an effective vote with respect to open market operations, discount rates and reserve requirements to maintain a voice in these vital and important questions of policy."

Refineries Operating at 66.6% Capacity.

By the Associated Press.

New York, May 7.—Daily average gross crude oil production in the United States decreased 67,300 barrels in the week ended May 4, totaling 2,494,100 barrels, the American Petroleum Institute's weekly summary indicates. Refineries representing 89.5 per cent of estimated total capacity, operated at 66.6 per cent of their capacity, reported daily average runs of crude oil to stills at 2,267,000 barrels. Daily average the previous week for refineries representing 89.8 per cent of total, operated at 71.3 per cent of capacity, was 2,429,000 barrels.

Finished gasoline stocks at refineries totaled 34,783,000 barrels against 36,586,000. Unfinished gasoline stocks totaled 5,977,000 barrels, against 5,906,000 barrels.

Postal Break Lowers Bonds; Federals Weak

Telegraph Issue Sinks 4¾ Points to 26¼ Under Pressure.

By the Associated Press.

New York, May 7.—The bond market was depressed today by weakness in a few domestic corporate issues and continued softness in U. S. Governments.

Another wide-open break in bonds of the Postal Telegraph Co. created considerable nervous tension in other divisions and while some industrials managed to escape without damage, losses of 1 to 2 points were numerous among rails.

Other than the expiration at midnight tonight of the privilege of converting First Liberty loan bonds into new 2¾ per cent Treasuries at par, there was no specific development to account for the further decline in Government bonds. Among the Treasuries losses extended from two-thirty-seconds to nine-thirty-seconds, but a slight recovery near the close brought most of them up from their lows. The two First Liberty loans were around one-half point lower but the turnover was small.

Although Postal Telegraph bonds had been quiet during the past week after sinking rapidly during the latter part of April, they were thrown at the market in substantial number today and declined another 4¾ points to 26¼. The company has not covered its fixed charges in the past four years and has an interest installment due on July 1. Transfers were $13,420,000.

Crop Promise Tumbles Grain

Wheat, Corn, Oats and Barley Recede Under Selling.

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, May 7.—Growing optimism in some grain trade quarters as to 1935 crop prospects, accompanied by favorable weather reports, resulted in a marked selling movement in all grain futures pits today, forcing prices around 2 cents lower.

Bearish crop news, lower Liverpool wheat prices, persistent pressure in corn, particularly September contracts, and scattered profit taking and stop-loss selling combined to give the market a thoroughly weak tone most of the session. Some selling was credited in pit gossip to an Eastern operator.

Corn, at times, led the decline, closing ¾ to 2⅛ cents below Monday's finish; July, 81½@81⅝. Wheat was off 1¼@1¾; July, 94¾@94⅞, and oats lost 1⅛@2; rye, 1⅝@2¼, and barley was 2 cents lower to 1 cent up.

Provisions trade was light.

("Paul Popenoe, of Los Angeles Institute of Family Relations, says very few bachelors over 35 are worth marrying."—News item.)

Oh,

Say not so!
It isn't the age,
It's the beau,
Mr. Popenoe.

Please Pass the Turnips!

Dietitians say a family of five can buy enough food to live on for a week for $8, an average of 23 cents a person a day. They claim the diet will include all the proteins, calories and minerals necessary. In brief, the family will get everything except the feeling of having had something to eat.

Problem: Why is it that dietitians who tell people how they can live on 23 cents a day are always the heaviest eaters? As Elmer Twitchell puts it: "Boy, did you ever take a dietitian out to dinner and see her wade through the menu?"

Sally Rand, fan dancer, addressed the Youngstown (Ohio) Y. M. C. A. the other day. That would seem the height of something or other except that her subject was: "The Economic Dangers of Communism in America."

THE BUNGLE FAMILY Look! By Harry J. Tuthill

WHILE HURRIEDLY PREPARING TO MOVE, MRS. BUNGLE FOUND A MYSTIC REMINDER OF INCIDENTS THAT BROUGHT THE FAMILY TO A DISTANT TROPICAL ISLAND.
The idol! In one corner of your valise! Imagine!
I must have put it in there absent-mindedly when we left home. Home! Oh Peggy, those were the happy days.
I blame this idol for everything. The very first time we made a wish I felt it was bad luck.
Here's another wish: I wish we'd see Dad soon, and also someone we know, and...
Oops! It fell...and it's broken. Smashed.
Good! Well, let's get packed.
And get out of this place before that dimlet-eyed Sierro poisons us or...
Sh-h! What's that? Listen...
Listen to what? All I hear is the usual creepy noises in that jungle and...
Sh-h! Hear that? It's a plane. Hear it?..and there..... lights. Two of them. Look!

The Federal Diary

Trade-Mark Registered U. S. Patent Office.

By Morgan Baker.

WHILE the NRA is being debated in the Senate we've looked into the personnel record of that New Deal agency and have found an efficient, hard-working corps under direct charge of Bradish J. Carroll, jr., administrative assistant and chief clerk.

BAKER.

Mr. Carroll, a resident of New York, was the first man sworn into office at NRA, being administered the oath within 20 minutes after President Roosevelt signed the national industrial recovery act, June 16, 1933. From that date Mr. Carroll worked day and night for several months, assisting the administrator in assembling a staff of approximately 4,000 employes. Although the appointments were made outside the civil service, NRA applicants were examined thoroughly before taking over their respective duties. In the higher positions training courses were given.

Despite the long hours of work the employes followed, particularly in the early weeks of the NRA, and the shafts of adverse criticism from various sources over the country on the recovery act itself, the morale has held up splendidly.

Realizing several months ago that "all work and no play, etc.," Mr. Carroll turned his organizing genius momentarily to another channel and the result was one of the most enthusiastic employe recreational associations in Washington—the NRA Athletic Association. This association has sponsored dances, receptions, picnics and a dozen varieties of sports, all affairs being attended almost en masse by the NRA employes.

Psychology of team work and discipline which he has appled so successfully to NRA personnel probably can be traced to his own keen interest in athletics and his military training, being a lieutenant commander in the Naval Reserves. Mr. Carroll has achievement, amiability or whatever the qualifications are for a Kentucky colonelship, because he was commissioned by Gov. Laffoon.

Brad Carroll is a difficult subject to write on. He is congenial enough, keenly alert with his hand on the pulse of every office in NRA, and will talk about almost any topic except himself. So, what we have learned about Carroll, the man, has been gained solely through the eyes of his fellow workers.

The Interdepartmental Tennis League's season will begin May 21. Patent Office, champion last year, expects to enter a strong team, headed by A. Tomeldon, (C).

A consistent prize winner in the membership campaign of the District Federation of Federal Employes Unions again carried off first honors in the contest for the weekly prize awarded by the National Federation of Federal Employes. He is Charles J. Newell, National Park Service.

Winning second prize in the latest tabulations is Mrs. Una J. Tilghman (F), Veterans' Administration. Several are tied for third place and a run-off will be held this week, according to Miss Matilda Lindsay, national organizer, who is directing the drive in the District.

"We have every reason to feel confident the objectives of the drive will be accomplished when it is concluded in June," Miss Lindsay said last night.

The grand prize in the campaign is a trip to Yellowstone National Park, where the N. F. F. E. Convention will be held September 2.
